THE SQUADRON'S LOG

BY THE STOWAWAY

All the way from Boston comes news of the wreck of the "Bluejacket," which was formerly owned by T. N. Moyer and harbored at Chestertown. The new owner invited friends from Boston to make a cruise on the yacht. Probably no one less informed and less experienced tried to sail a schooner yacht than the present owners of the "Bluejacket."

With the valor of ignorance her captain set out in the face of the storm warnings to cruise along the Atlantic coast.

Then the storm burst upon them in all its jury.

Instead of making for open water, the captain tried to beat wind and wave by hugging the shore.

The "Bluejacket" took the punishment, and in retaliation pitched about breaking up everything movable, and tearing loose all that was fastened down.

Owner, crew and guests were bruised and battered.

At last a trawler, in some miraculous way, managed to take off the people, and the "Bluejacket" was abandoned.

Freed at last from her unwise captain, the "Bluejacket" floated off and tossed merrily about until captured by a coast guard cutter which towed her to Norfolk. She is there at rest in the coast guard shelter, all that is left of her, that is.

Those who have known the "Bluejacket" cannot help but grieve at the raw deal that was handed to her. Had she been given her head in deep water there is little doubt that she would have outridden the storm with small damage.

The Curbstone Diplomat

WILLIAM S. COLLINS

There is nothing wrong with the prohibition law. The fact that it is not enforced is the trouble. Have you heard this one? Sure you have, so lets argue this out right here at home on our Local Option Law.

Kent County has a law against the sale of liquor. How can they enforce it? The officers hear as the people hear of many that are selling the liquors. To arrest these people it is necessary to get evidence. So who is going to step up and produce this evidence? Naturally the sellers are not going to sell to an officer. If you go and tell an officer that you hear John Doe is selling liquor you are not producing evidence enough for arrest. The officers might keep their eye on John Doe but they must have direct evidence as in any other criminal case.

The County when financial conditions were better, would spend a few hundred dollars a year hiring trained people to make these buys. Although they tried to buy from all the boys selling liquors, they were able only to buy from the dumber ones. A smart bootlegger does not sell to local bums or any strangers.

In all justice to the courts and juries these that were caught were most always convicted and given three months, six months and longer jail terms. They served their time came back, a little wiser as who to sell to and started up again. This has been going on for a long time.

Efforts to get local people to make these buys meets with little success. The only ones that can be secured of late was one half-wit who is not to be trusted. Another was a convict. Nobody of any standing what-so-ever seems willing to help produce any evidence. The Drys themselves are unwilling to give any assistance. The "Drys" as much as anybody else can be blamed with the failure of our Local Option Law. What is true of our County is true of the nation. Just think of the difference here with other crimes such as stealing, etc. Plenty of people are willing to testify in such cases.

Most people break the prohibition law and they do not want to see it enforced. The best way to keep out of trouble is to have nothing to do with the enforcement of prohibition. Just let the officers do the best they can. They are up against a tough problem.

From all indications Kent County will give the "Ratification of the Amendment" a big majority next Tuesday. The Dry's are working hard but are up against a tough proposition. They will have the satisfaction of knowing they did the best they could and should be respected for their efforts.

The Wets apparently are doing nothing. The leaders of the cause seem to be afraid to do anything. These leaders should a least make an effort to get the vote out on Tuesday. With a few exceptions, the leaders are pussy footing and deserve no respect. They are likely to get away with it though, for when the county goes wet they will get the credit and by laying down on the job have not offended the Drys.

The ballot is confusing.. The Drys have carefully instructed their following how to mark the ballot. They also have an advertisement elsewhere in this issue which also explains how to vote Dry.

If you want to vote Wet but do not know how, here are the candidates. Helen S. Athey, Ella T. Clotworthy, R. Bennett Darnall, J. McFadden Dick, Elizabeth Lowndes, Joseph P. McCurdy, Edward R. Buck, Edward J. Clarke, Henry Lloyd, Jr. Put the mark opposite all nine of these names and you vote for repeal. They are on the left side of the ballot.

Another interesting thing to note is that many of the county newspapers in Maryland are editorially speaking for Repeal. Editor Worthington, of Belair, and elder of the Presbyterian Church an extremely temperate man, is scheduled to come out this week with a wet editorial. This week will see many more doing likewise.

DENY ROAD PETITION

A hearing on the petition of Mr. Edgar R. Pennington to close the public road at Willow Bottom and the road one half mile south of Kennedyville and running in a south-easternly direction the distance of one mile, was held by the County Commissioers on Tuesday of this week.

Following a hearing on both sides the Commissioners denied both petitions.

PAYING BILLS

A wholesale dealer had a lot of trouble getting one of his retail customers to pay his bills. Finally he lost patience and wrote him a letter threaening to turn his account over for collection. The customer was terribly mad, and showed it. He wrote the wholesaler as follows:

"What do you mean by sending me such an insulting letter? Every month I place all my bills in a basket and then I blindfold my stengrapher and have her pick out as many bills as we can pay. It just happens that you are unlucky. If you don't like my way of doing business I won't even put your bill in the basket."
