NOW AND THEN

Henry Vandyke has passed to the great beyond but hi writings and poems are still with us. Below we are copying a poem written after the new president had taken his seat. It is hoped that he will be able to do as Vandyke says:

TO OUR NEW PILOT

O Pilot, in this dim, distressful day
Called to the helm, let nothing you dismay!
The Ship of State is sound, though careless hands
Have let her drift too near the fatal sands
Of Folly Bank. But you know how to steer!
"Wear ship," and find a channel safe and clear.
Try no wild ways where boats of old were wrecked;
Promise no miracles that fools expect;
But with clear eyes and hands as firm as steel
Guide the great vessel of the Common Weal.
Accept the help of every honest man,
Not asking what his party or his clan;
But send below the selfish, sordid few
Who gambled gayly while the storm-clouds grew.
Protect the rights and savings of the poor;
Make honor bright and industry secure;
Nor from your fearless mind let slip
The Navy's watchword:
For the Good o' the ship!

Tulip Time in Holland

Holland is most beautiful in tulip time, for though all flowers flourish in this low country, yet the tulips are the Hollanders favorite flower. And they send the bulbs all over the world When they are in bloom it is a gorgeour scene brilliant beautiful colors but the people who raise them cut them all down for it is the bulbs which they are after and the lovely flowers are used to fertilize the ground. And each year they improve them by crossing and mixing the colors. In fact a Hollander would much prefer a fine breed of tulip than much fine gold.

A story is told of a burgomaster who was anxious to secure a political position. His friend offered to secure it for him, and the Burgo-master invited him to see his garden. After securing the position he went to see his friend's garden and there he saw one of his tulips which his benefactor had taken from the burgomasters garden. So angry was he that he threw up his position, sold his estate, and left the country.

Talking about this monkey business, it has certainly caused much excitement here. Having occasion to go up town about five on Sunday afternoon I was alarmed to see a great crowd gathered in the court house green. Thinking that it was a fire, was relieved to find that the escaped monkey had decided to climb one of the high trees there.

And as he gazed down upon the multitude, he knew that he as monarch of all he surveyed for no one would dare to scale that dizzy height.

There was never a more interesting, or a more sarcastic character than Dean Swift, of the 18th century. He hurled sarcasm alike at friends and foes, writing books that were read by everybody at that time, "The Tale of the Tub," Gullivers Travels and a number of other articles and books. He was a contributor to that famous paper. "The Spectator" for which he wrote the folowing verse:

"Conversation is but carving!
Give no more to every guest
Than he's able to digest.
Give him always of the prime
And but a little at a time.
Carve to all but just enough,
Let them neither starve nor stuff,
And that you may have your due
Let your neighbor care for you."

Because of his criticism, the king was glad to send him to Ireland where for many years he was dean of the Cathredral. In spite of his bitter tongue he was madly loved by two women, Stella and Vanessa, and his letters to the former became very famous after his death. One day when walking with his friend, Addison, he saw a tree dying at the top, and he said sadly "That is the way I shall go, dying first at the top." His prophecy came true for he lost his memory and his old age was a very sad one.

TO HAVE DISPOSAL PLANT

ORDERED BUILT BY STATE BOARD OF HEALTH

PUBLIC MEETING CALLED OFF

The State Department of Health, at a meeting on Thursday of this week, passed an order requiring that the present sewerage disposal system of Chestertown be corrected.

This action was taken on the eve of a public meeting scheduled at Chestertown for next Monday night. The meeting was consequently called off.

In reference to the order, Dr. R. H. Riley Director of the State Department of Health and Chairman of the State Board of Health, in a telephone communication on Friday morning made a statement to the effect that:

He visited Chestertown recently to investigate the condition of sewerage disposal in Chestertown. He consulted with the Mayor and various other officials. The condition, following the recent high tide in which several feet of sewerage was wsahed int othe cellars of homes on the water front; the fact that oystering has been condemned for some years five miles below town; the danger of people bathing in the river together with the general unsanitary condition caused by open sewers flowing into the water front, deemed it imperative, he concluded, to take some action by the State Board of Health.

Accordingly at the regular monthly meeting on Thursday of this week, it was unanimously passed that an order be prepared by the Attorney General to be served on the Mayor and Council, directing that the sewerage disposal system of Chestertown be corrected.

It is assumed that such an order will require a completion of all the sewers, the erection of a disposal plant somewhere in the vicinity of the Armory, and that all homes will be required to connect with the sewerage system. This last requirement, in reference to connecting with sewerage, is in the Charter of Chestertown and also required by special ordinance but has never been rigidly enforced.

The public meeting which was called for Monday night has been called off due to the fact that the Board of Health took action sooner than was expected.

Dr. Cullen, a member of the State Board of Health, has been an untiring worker for an improvement in the sewerage condition at Chestertown was greatly pleased at the action taken. Three years ago he personally paid for a half page advertisement in the Chestertown papers pointing out the health menace of the present system.

It is understood that the money for the work in Chestertown will come from the Federal Public Works program.

The State Board of Health has been urging the officials of Chestertown for several years to correct the condition, but due to the fact that a majority of the town voters were not directly affected by the condition, the work has never been done.

COCK-EYED ART

'I LOVED A WONAN'

Four Presidents of the United States play vital parts in the plot of "I Loved A Woman," the First National picture which shows at the New Lyceum Theatre on Wednesday and Thursday, October 4 and 5, with Edward G. Robinson and Kay Francis in a double star cast.

William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft and Woodrow Wilson each provide an important turning point in the career of John Hayden, head of the house of Hayden & Company, meat packing millionaires.

It is the assassination of McKinley which brings Theodore Roosevelt into office, as the nemesis of the Chicago packers. In the picture Hayden and his fellow-conspirators are depicted as pulling political wires to have Roosevelt safely shelved as Vice-President.

When in office, he brought about the enactment of the Federal Meat Inspection Act. Taft inaugurated a federal investigation of the packers' combination to bring about a monopoly in the meat industry. At the outbreak of the World War, the dissolution of what had become known as "The Beef Trust" was ordered under the administration of Woodrow Wilson.

Each of these Presidential acts formed a turning point in the dramatic rise of John Hayden to a position of international importance, in the world of finance and industry.

Of the four Presidents, however, only one actually appears in the drama as a living character—Theodore Roosevelt, played by E. J. Ratcliffe. But though McKinley, Taft and Wilson are not visualized on the screen, their far-reaching influence upon the life of John Hayden is powerfully brought out in the course of the picture.

Other members of the cast are Genevieve Tobin, Murray Kinnell, Robert Barrat, Henry Kolker, Robert McWade, J. Farrell McDonald, George Blackwood and Henry O'Neill.

The picture is based on a novel by David Karsner, author of "Silver Dollar," and is the dramatic story of the love of a powerful packer for an opera singer. Alfred E. Green directed it from the screen play by Charles Kenyon and Sidney Sutherland.
