SIN'S REWARD

A motorist and his wife were picnicking at a favorite spot where several other cars were parked. To his astonishment the motorist saw a young man stealthily remove a spare fuel can from his running board, empty the contents into his own tank, and carefully return the can.

The watching man said nothing, but, resuming his journey later, discovered the thief in trouble with his engine about a mile away.

The aggrieved motorist stopped, and leaning over the side said quietly:

"I always carry a spare can of water because I have a slight radiator leak. Sorry you've been troubled."

OUCH!

He—Darling, I would be so happy if you would but smile on my suit.

She—I feel more like laughing.

Short Measure

A prosperous-looking man was strolling leisurely through the park. He was hailed by a friend.

"Hallo!" said the latter, with a show of surprise. "What are you doing for a living now?"

The first man took a huge cigar from his mouth.

"I'm running a grocery business," he replied.

"And you're making a success of it?" put in his friend.

"Yes," replied the grocer offhandedly, "in a small weigh."

Neutral

A discussion had arisen in the club upon the subject of tariffs. The principal protagonists, having exhausted their arguments, appealed to the only other person present, a wealthy but not particularly well-educated member.

His tactful reply was: "No, gentlemen, I ain't going to side neither with the one nor the other. If you don't mind I'd prefer to remain quite putrid."

Seeking Protection

Late at night the landlord of some flats was awakened by a tenant.

Tenant—Can the landlord interfere when a woman in the third-floor flat quarrels with her husband and disturbs the neighbors at night?

Landlord—You are the neighbor?

Tenant—No, I am the husband.

BUZZ-Z-Z!

"Why do you liken DeGrab to the busy bee? He isn't particularly industrious, is he?"

"Oh, no; it isn't that. But nearly every one he touches get stung."

Not Simple Enough

"Is there a simple remedy for sleeplessness?"

"Yes, one need only count up to 100."

"Sounds very good, but our baby cannot count up to 100."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Looking Forward

Binks—Young Jenkins engaged? Is he making any preparation for married life?

Jinks—Oh, yes; every time he takes a drink he chews a clove!

Dissatisfied

Prim Lady—I don't like the way this parrot swears.

Bird Dealer—I'm sorry, ma'am, but I can't give you one that can swear better.—Smith's Weekly.

Pin-Prick

Plumber—And none of your lip about me forgettin' things. I've got my mate and my tools, and—

Maid—Then take 'em to the right house.

How Could He!

"Does it bring bad luck to tell about a dream before breakfast?"

"It certainly did when I told my wife the one I had about Greta Garbo."—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Then Came the War

Mrs. Knagg—I was a fool when I married you.

Mr. Knagg—I suppose you were, but I was so infatuated at the time that I didn't notice it as much as I do now.

A Treat for Dad

Son—Tomorrow is dad's birthday—what shall we do for him?

Daughter—We might let him have his car for a change.—Life.

WHEN SICKNESS THREATENS

Children can be taught that the doctor is their friend. Periodic medical examinations will encourage this attitude, but threats that "the doctor will take you to the hospital" if the child does not do what is wanted, will ruin that relationship and make keeping him well more difficult. Whenever a child is sick, he should be put to bed and kept quiet away from others. If he has a communicable disease the isolation will benefit his brothers and sisters. If the disease is not contageous, the quiet will benefit the patient. Call a doctor and give the medicine he prescribes conscientiously.
