The Wayside Poet

TRUE FRIENDS

There are friends who seem so friendly,
When success attends our way;
When the gay world smiles upon us,
And our hearts are glad and gay.

There are friends who seem so friendly,
When the plaudits of the crowd—
Come to us so overwhelming,
Ringing out, so long and loud.

There are friends who seem so friendly,
When our cash we freely spend;
Who, in joining us in pleasures—
Their encouragement will lend.

There are friends who seem so friendly,
In the care-free happy day;
Suddenly grow cold and careless,
When misfortune comes our way.

There are FRIENDS who prove more FRIENDLY,
When our tears of sorrow fall;
And their friendship's far more precious,
When in direct need we call.

So, it is not wealth we're asking,
Gifts of pleasure, or of fame;
But, our hearts are deeply longing,
For a true and loving friend.
