The Wayside Poet

By J. Thomas Price

WHAT'S THE USE TO WORRY?

What's the use to worry,
If the chickens don't come home;
What's the use to worry,
If the dog afar does roam;
What's the use to worry,
If the sun does hide her face;
YOU should be glad you'r living,
And occupy, on earth, a place.

What's the use to worry,
If the cook leaves in a huff;
What's the use to worry,
If the weather does get rough;
What's the use to worry,
If the rent is over due;
YOU should be glad you're living,
Thank your stars—and start anew.

What's the use to worry,
Tho' the world does pass you up;
What's the use to worry,
Tho' life does get in a rut;
What's the use to worry,
Tho' your better-half does scrap;
YOU should be glad you're living,
And are still found on the map.

What's the use to worry,
Doesn't get you anywhere;
What's the use to worry,
And kill yourself with care;
LIFE is largely what you make it,
Jump in and get your share;
IT'S ALL YOURS—if you'll take it,
So get busy; DO AND DARE.

SO—WHAT'S THE USE TO WORRY?

HEALTH-MOBILE ENDS TOUR

1589 CHILDREN EXAMINED

After its tour of the counties in Southern Maryland and on the Eastern Shore, the Health-mobile of the Bureau of Child Hygiene of the State Department of Health, has been dismantled and put away for the winter. Starting out just before the Fourth of July, and remaining in the field until the middle of September, the "Health Bus" covered over 1,400 miles.

Seven counties were visited—St. Mary's, Charles, Calvert, Prince George's, Kent, Queen Anne's and Somerset. Stops were made in accordance with plans arranged by the County Health Officers, at conveniently accessible places along the way. During the eleven weeks of the tour, 85 places were visited, 89 health conferences were held for the examination of babies and children under school age; and 1,589 children were examined, an average of 29 or 30 each day.

As soon as a stopping place was reached, the big car was parked; the curtains attached to the side were stretched out to form dressing rooms; the steps leading up to the body of the car, which serves as the examining room, were adjusted, the scales used in weighing the children, and the supplies needed by the doctor, were put in their proper places; the dental chair and the equipment used by the dentist in examining the children's teeth were brought out on the green, and everything was in readiness for the mothers and children.

The staff of the "Health Bus" included a doctor, a dentist, the public health nurse of the county visited, and the driver of the car. Of the children examined, 1,137 needed follow up care of some sort. Approximately one out of every seven, 216, was underweight; 142 had unhealthy tonsils; 41 were "mouth breathers." Of the total number in attendance, 1,341 had a dental examination and 767 were treated by the dentist.

There were 614 children from five to seven years old examined in preparation for their admission to school. Vaccination against smallpox had been neglected for 334, more than half of them, and the parents were notified that they would have to be vaccinated before they could be received at any public school in the State. When medical treatments were needed, the mothers were directed to take their children to their family doctor.

HOG CHOLERA IN KENT

SEVENTEEN CASES REPORTED DURING OCTOBER

Seventeen outbreaks of hog cholera were reported in Kent County during the month of October as compared with 122 in the State, and was only topped by Worcester County which had eighteen.

The majority of the outbreaks in the State were among small herds for personal consumption and 80 of the 122 cases were traced to the feeding of garbage containing infected pork scraps. Of the remaining outbreaks, the causes of 15 were undetermined and the others were due to the contact with and the purchase of sick hogs.

In the 122 outbreaks reported, 1,519 hogs were involved. Of these, 402 were sick, and 237 were dead, at the time the cases were investigated. Delay in reporting outbreaks was directly responsible for some spread of the disease, and heavier losses than need have been incurred.

Maryland farmers have had little cause to use anything but sanitation and common sense in preventing cholera outbreaks in their herds. It is the little feeder who takes chances he can ill-afford who has lost most heavily, because of his feeding methods and improper management.

SCHOOL BIDS REJECTED

The bids on the school properties at Broad neck, Lankford, and Flatland which were offered for sale by the Kent County Board of Education, were rejected by the Board at their meeting on Tuesday of this week as they considered the bids insufficient.
