AT THE NOVIES NEXT WEEK

The combined talents of Jack Oakie, Jack Haley, Ginger Rogers, and Thelma Todd, aided by music written by Mack Gordon and Harry Revel, and a chorus of more than eighty of Hollywood's most talented and ravishing chorus girls make a fast and furious, mirth-provoking spectacle in Paramount's screen musical comedy, "Sitting Pretty," coming on Monday and Tuesday, December 25 and 26 to the New Lyceum Theatre.

The story was directd by Harry Joe Brown from the original suggested by Nina Wilcox Putnam, and was produced by Charles R. Rogers for Paramount. The cast also includes Gregory Ratoff, Lew Cody, the Pickens Sisters and the Beverly Hill Billies.

Oakie and Haley, self-titled "the world's greatest song writers" show how two smart boys with nerve and talent can make an indelible impression on Hollywood's movie producers, bankrolls and beautiful blondes.

Ginger Rogers, who appears with the entire chorus in the famous fandance, finally marries Haley in this picture, although the two boys are alternately in and out of love with her, from the moment they meet at a roadside barbecue stand on their way out to the Golden West.

A fantastic and hilarious success finally climaxes their madcap efforts when it seems as though this goofy pair, who can rhyme "moon" and 'spoon' but can't handle 'Hollywood' and 'blonde' have suffered a dismal failure.

The most absorbing love drama shown on our screen for many years comes to the New Lyceum on Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 27 and 28.

This remarkable picture is the Universal production, "Only Yesterday," the crowning achievement of John M. Stahl, that master director of domestic problem plays. Surging emotions bring to the story a tense quality which is admirably interpreted by a real all star cast of 72 principals, headed by Margaret Sullavan, John Boles, Billie Burke and Reginald Denny, and also includes Edna Mae Oliver, Franklin Pangborn, Berton Churchill, Benita Hume, Onslow Stevens, June Clyde, Barry Norton, Natalie Moorhead, Walter Catlett and Betty Blythe.

The story covers the exciting period between the entrance of America into the World War and the cataclysmic Stock Market crash of November, 1929. Against this panorama of American life is portrayed a vitally poignant love story which has never been equalled for sheer emotional quality on the screen. Even Stahl's own "Back Street" is unimportant beside the romance of Margaret Sullavan playing a naive, adorable Southern belle and John Boles, the handsome thoughtless officer. Miss Sullavan, making her movie debut straight from "Dinner at 8" on Broadway, will also make screen history by her brilliant performance. You will see a new star born here.

Wall Street, as it was before the fatal crash of September, 1929, is the locale of much of the story of Jack Holt's current starring vehicle, "Master of Men," which will be at the New Lyceum on Friday and Saturday, December 29 and 30, a part of a double feature program.

The picture deals with the life of a multi-millionaire steel and Wall Street magnate who got his start as a "hunky" in a steel mill and through sheer force of personality and domination won his way to the top. It closely parallels the life of a czar of the steel industry who recently dominated the industry.

In the supporting cast are Fay Wray, Holt's leading lady, Walter Connolly, Theodor von Eltz and Berton Churchill.

The slingshot, that weapon dear to the hearts of boyhood, figures importantly in the story of "Forbidden Trail," Buck Jones' latest Columbia western picture, due at the New Lyceum on Friday and Saturday, December 29 and 30.

Jones appears in the characterization of a happy go lucky cowboy, who drifts aimlessly from one job to another, always playing practical pranks in which the slingshot usually figures.

Jones is expert with the slingshot and contrives to stir up lots of excitement among the dangerous cowboys he encounters in his roamings.

"Forbidden Trail" has an impressive cast of actors, including Barbara Weeks as the heroine, Mary Carr, Wallis Clark, Frank La Rue, George Cooper, Frank Rice and others. The picture was directed by Lambert Hillyer.
