In continuing the remembrances of old colonial homes of the town, another one has the claim of being the oldest in town and that is the present home of Mrs. Fleming. It was a square brick building with a very antique look within the older residents memory. It was afterward repaired and for a time was the residence of Judge Pearce's before he built the house that was so long his home on the corner of Water street and Maple Ave., now used as the Rectory of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Across the river at the end of Chester River Bridge is the old Primrose House, now used as a hotel, "Tilghman house." It is a fine old brick house very attractively situated and all prepared for summer boarders.

A visitor in Chestertown some time ago pointed to the old Eliason building on High Street as the most antique looking building in town.

With its attractive entrance it gives one the impression that it must have been an old tavern, but it was built by Mr. Thomas Eliason the I grandfather of the present owner. A little girl, many years ago, when being urged by her mother to write a letter to a friend far away, wrote. "Mr. Elison is preparing his store, and next to him is Mr. Smith with big dolls." That was in the time when the father of the present Mr. Eliason was a popular young man about town, a good many years ago and that same little girl often visited that vicinity for her great desire was to own one of "those dolls," and though she did not obtain her wish, she had the pleasure of looking at them. The little building, Mr. Smith's store, has given away to the Kent County Savings Bank.

Where the First National Bank now stands was a large square building called the Ricaud House. It was a very poular home during Mr. Ricaud's life time, but it was sold after his death and was converted into a shop and Mr. Burton Burchinal kept store there for quite a while. Mr. Sparks afterwards sold merchandise there, and it was afterwards purchased from him by the Bank. Dr. Hughes' home is a most attractive house. It was at one time the rectory, but was sold, and Dr. Hughes has altered it wthout destroying its Colonial appearance.

The old Westcott house is another antique home, with its high ceilings mantels. It, grounds at one time had a large yard on Queen St. and also one on Court St. It is regretted that both of the yards have been sold shutting it off from both streets.

The old house owned by Mr. Usilton on the upper part of Cannon St. is another old Colonial building but it has been altered and the large yard attached to it has been sold off in lots. What a pity these old houses were not retained in their pristine beauty! Now they would be valuable property for old things, old houses and old furniture are in great demand.

WOMAN DIVER

Women have engaged in many occupations in recent years but the most astonishing is deep sea diving. Mrs. Goodman, who is both poet and author, has recently organized a diving crew, and has salvaged the valuable freight of the steamship Petawbic which was wrecked in Lake Huron in 1862 losing its large freight of copper and worse still all of 155 passengers. Besides 67 tons of copper, there was a small ship vault containing 55,000 dollars in paper currency.

She describes the diving as dangerous but thrilling in the extreme.

"If people would look upon diving as a scientific problem, many of the dangers could be avoided."

She expects to spend the summer in retrieving treasurer lost in Lake Superior.

She thinks probably that it will be possible to salvage the treasure of the Lusitania but the water where the Titanic went down is too deep for diving.

WHAT MY LADY WEARS

When all is said and done there is nothing more satisfactory than the fitness of things. That is why it is grand to see linens and cottons coming forward so gallantly for Summer. They belong especially to hot days. Their very casualness brings the smartness that makes them belong, no matter where they go. They will travel far this season.

Linens and cottons will whirl to the Carioca here and abroad and enliven the beaches on both sides of the Atlantic from this time until the advent of the equinox bids them vanish.

One might imagine that there was nothing new to say about these tub fabrics (whoever it was that said there was "nothing new under the sun" did not reckon with woman and her fashion-mindedness), but there is. Imagine using a tablecloth for an ensemble and a bedspread for a dress. The fact is almost as exaggerated as that and far more practical and better looking.

Moss-Green

For the red-haired gal there's nothing more flattering than the moss-green tone now in favor. A frock of moss-green may be ornamented with touches of burnt orange, a color which also looks well with most shades of red hair and which, combined with the green, is what stylists call a dramatic note.

Hairpins

The fashion for longer ringlets is said by one Parish coiffeur to be responsible for an increased demand for hairpins of metal rapped around with silk thread to match the shade of the hair, as these pins do not slip.
