NOW AND THEN

MAKING THE MOST OF LIFE

I feel that he succeeds the best who makes the most of life;
Who's not discouraged or defeated,
touched by stress and strife,
Who makes the most of what he has
will find that he succeeds:
The good he has just multiplies, supplies him all he needs.

No life can be so barren, friend, but
that there's good somewhere;
We must then find the hidden good
give it thought and care.
There's no career, no work to do, but
has its full reward,
If we but place our own affairs in keeping of the Lord.

If you would make the most of life, to
what you have give praise!
But you must never once complain:
Be joyful all your days.
For you can make a big success, nor
once be touched by strife,
If you succeed with what you have and make the most of life.

Every game has its own rules. The rules of one game might conflict with the rules of another.

So in living we find rules by which to live, rules that make life better smoother and more successful. One rules that applies to every driver of an automobile is that of watching both himself and the other fellow. But the student of higher life finds that he needs only to watch himself and the other fellow will take care of himself.

DO YOU KNOW THAT:

There is nothing that pleases columnists more than to have what they say criticized. It shows very plainly that the column on which they have racked their brains is read anyhow. 'The tree that bears the most fruit has the most chunks.'

And the drouth is heavy in the land. They are sending cattle from the west where all pasturage is drying up to the green field of Maryland. Will her fair fields dry up too?

We read that the Sovet in Russia, is punishing the peasants for praying to the God of their Fathers for rain for their crops are dying.

Thre have been many stories told lately of the antics and habits of animals; one we read of a missing calf which, after being searched for all over the farm, was found quietly sleeping in his master's bed.

The following is a true story being witnessed by the writer.

A hen had a flock of six fine chickens, but when they were almost frying size, she was killed. Did the young chicks mourn her death? Not at all. They began to follow a well grown gosling that was in the yard. It was a comical sight to see these large chickens always following their adopted mother, but what made it funnier was, that the gosling did not want them, and they pestered it almost to death. Sometimes, it seemed that it wanted to commit suicide to get away from its followers. When it wished to have a quiet swim, the family would stand on the bank, making noisy demonstrations. It was only after the chicken were grown and sold that it was relieved of its charge, and not long after, it too, was sacrified to the appetites of its owners so its life of peace did not last long.

There seems to be quite a controversy down the "Spillway," as to which is pleasanter in a street car on a rainy day, to sit beside a woman, who is always supposed to be thin, but being careful of her own clothes is apt to be let her neighbor have the benefit of her wet umbrella, or to choose a seat beside a fat man with his umbrella neatly folded. The question is not settled yet.
