RELIEF FEEDER CATTLE TO BE PASTURED IN MARYLAND

KENT FARMERS MAY APPLY FOR PASTURE HIRE

County Agent McVean has announced a plan for handling in Maryland a considerable number of feeder cattle from the drouth stricken areas of the country being made under the direction of Mr. T. B. Symons, director of the Extension Service. He states that the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation has acquired a large number of feeder cattle purchased in the areas where there is not feed to maintain them and it is necessary to place these animals in states which have grazing and other facilities for putting them in condition for slaughter and distribution to families on relief.

Briefly, the plan contemplates delivering to Maryland farmers the number of steers which their indvdual conditions, as to pasturage and feeding facilities, permit them to handle.

The animals will remain the property of the government to be used only for relief purposes, and payment will be made at the usual local rate per animal per month for pasturing them. The length of time they will be so cared for will depend upon the condition of the cattle and the pasture, but it is expected that on the average it will be about two or three months. If necessary, provisions will be made separately for furnishing these steers with grain and other feed. Later they will be slaughtered and prepared for distribution through relief agencies, either for immediate use, or in the form of canned products.

Dr. Symons emphasizes the fact that only young feeder steers will be brought to Maryland and that they will be free from disease. He states also that, while it is the desire in this State to cooperate with the Federal Government to the greatest extent possible in this emergency, it is very important that care be exercised in order to avoid bringing in more than can be pastured and fed properly.

Any Kent farmer who has good pasture with adequate fences and water should notify County Agent J. D. McVean.

HOT WEATHER SUGGESTIONS

Babies need special care during the hot muggy days of midsummer to protect them from the digestive diseases that are prevalent at this season. Some precautions that should be taken to safeguard them against summer complaint and similar diseases are outlined by Dr. J. H. M. Knox, Jr., Chief of the Bureau of Child Hygiene, of the State Department of Health, as follows:

"To keep your well baby well, keep in touch with your doctor. Take your baby to him regularly. At the first sign of any digestive disturbance get your doctor's advice—and do as he says.

"Babies who are nursed by their mothers are less likely to suffer from serious digestive disturbances than are the bottle fed babies. The best substitute for mother's milk is clean cow's milk diluted with water according to your doctor's directions. If cow's milk is not available, use unsweetened evaporated milk. An equal quantity of water added to the evaporated milk will produce a mixture equal to the fresh milk.

"All cow's milk used for baby should be boiled for two or three minutes before preparing the feedings. After boiling, the milk should be cooled as rapidly as possble, placed in individual bottles and kept on the ice or in a cool place. Each feeding should be warmed as needed. Milk given to the older children should also be boiled, then cooled and kept cool and covered until used.

"Some of the most serious sicknesses among babies can be traced to carelessness in handling the milk, and to failure to keep the feeding bottles properly cleaned. Don't let the bottles lie around after using. The baby will take all he wants in a twenty minutes feeding. Throw out any milk left in the bottle. Clean the bottle thoroughly and sterilize it, by boiling, before using it again.

"Let at least three hours pass between feedings—four hours are preferable, unless your doctor orders otherwise. Between feedings give the baby cooled, boiled water to drink.

"Be very particular about protecting the baby against flies. They are a very real source of danger. Keep them away from the baby, from his food, and from anything connected with the baby. Flies carry disease producing germs from all sorts of places and carry them to the baby—to its food—and deposit them on articles that come in contact with the baby. Keep the flies out of the house by screening the kitchen and other rooms. Throw light mosquito netting over the baby's crib or carriage when he sleeps out of doors.

"Keep the baby away from people who are ill. Don't let him come in contact with people who are suffering from diarrheal troubles or colds.

"Call your doctor at the first indication of sickness."

A Highly Romantic Drama sheds new light on a delicate marriage problem involving a couple's efforts to prolong the honeymoon in 'Let's Try Again', new c-starring vehicle for Diana Wyyard and Clive Brook, coming to the New Lyceum on Monday and Tuesday, August 6 and 7.

Adapated from the Broadway success 'Sour Grapes' by Vincent Lawrence, 'Let's Try Again' deals with this problem common to most marriages with pathos, poignancy and sophisticated wit and is said to offer a workable solution. After ten years of married life, Dr. Jack Overton, a prominent physician and surgeon, has become lax in giving his beautiful Alice the niceties and little attentions which every woman expects. She believes his love has waned, and seeks a temporary haven in Paul, a much younger man.

When Alice applies for a divorce, she is astounded as Jack informs her he doesn't really love her. He in turn resumes his attention to a dancer. In the meanwhile, Jack's niece, Marge who is engaged to marry Paul, is expecting his baby, and Paul contends he is honor bound to marry her. Jack and Alice then solve their baffling dilemma and conflicting emotions in an unusual and surprising climax.

Miss Wynyard and Brook, stars of the memorable 'Cavalcade,' who were seen here recently in their clever comedy offering 'Where Sinners Meet,' are again reunitel in 'Let's Try Again.' This RKO-Radio Picture was directed by Worthington Miner, noted Theatre Guild director of 'Reunion in Vienna' and 'Five Star Final.' In supporting roles are Irene Hervey, Helen Vinson, Theodore Newton and Arthur Hoyt.

Divorced parents antagonize each other over the custody and education of their child in the dramatic theme of te New Lyceum Theatre new presentation, ' His Greatest Gamble,' Richard Dix's newest starring feature for RKO-Radio Pictures, shown here on Wednesday and Thursday, August 8 and 9.

Dix as Philip Eden and Erin O'Brien Moore as his wife Florence each seek to influence their eight year old Alice. Philip's efforts are forcibly interrupted by a fifteen year jail sentence.

Florence pampers Alice through the ensuing decade into a spineless debutante, who fears to elope with the young man whom she truly loves. Philip hears of this, and, breaks jail. In a pulse-beating climax he lashes his daughter's latent spirit into rebellion and into the paths of happiness.

Edith Fellos and Dorothy Wilson respectively portray the daughter as child and adult in 'His Greatest Gamble,' whose featured supporting cast also includes Bruce Cabot and Shirley Grey. John an adaptation of Salisbury Field's story.

The program for Friday and Saturday, August 10 and 11 at the New Lyceum will feature the usual BIG DOUBLE FEATURE program. TIM McCOY is the star of the action hit 'speed Wings' and 'Lets talk it over' is a new comedy feature with the popular stars Chester Morris and Mae Clark.

MONUMENTS IN OLD CHURCH CEMETERY RECALL EARLY HISTORY OF COUNTRY

Above, the graves of Benjamin Franklin and his wife. Right, after 130 years the inscription on this marble tablet to the first Treasurer of the United States is still legible.

CHRIST Church Burial Ground, historic cemetery in the heart of Philadelphia's wholesale and warehouse district, resting place of Benjamin Franklin and four others who signed the Declaration of Independence, is being restored.

Under the direction of the Rev. Louis C. Washburn, rector of Christ Church, and Harvey Mertz, sexton, graves lost for half a century are being located, marble monuments and vaults, some of them more than two hundred years old, are being replaced in their original positions, and the entire plot is being made into a place of beauty consonant with its historic associations.

Founded in 1719, seventy years before Washington became President and a year after the death of William Penn, the little cemetery became the last resting place of some of the most prominent citizens of colonial days. There in one corner lie Franklin and his wife, Deborah, in a marble tomb, the construction of which Franklin himself supervised. There also are Benjamin Rush, Francis Hopkinson, George Ross and Joseph Hewes, all signers of the Declaration of Independence; Peyton Randolph, president of the First Continental Congress; Michael Hillegas, first treasurer of the United States; William Tilghman, chief justice of Pennsylvania, and many another whose works had a lasting effect upon our country.

As the years went by the little houses that lined the streets of Penn's pioneer village gave way to business buildings and, as the city grew and business moved westward, these in turn became industrial buildings and warehouses. But the little burial ground, now surrounded by a tall brick wall, remained intact.

In the scores of years that have elapsed since most of the burials took place, many who were buried there were forgotten. Tombs and headstones, neglected, sank beneath the ground.

Guided by a record made in 1865, Mr. Mertz has uncovered more than a dozen markers that had been completely covered with earth and ivy vines. Only the other day he found the headstone that had marked the grave of Joseph, son of Charles Willing, the first mayor of Philadelphia, who passed away in 1750.

Incidentally, Mr. Mertz would like to learn something of J. Gullen, one of the early stone carvers whose name is inscribed on several of the memorials in the cemetery. Mr. Mertz estimates that his work was done about 1812. Several monuments bear the characteristic marks of his chisel even though they do not bear his name.

WILMINGTON DOLLAR DAY

SEMI ANNUAL AFFAIR TO BE HELD AUG. 8

Fall Dollar Day in Wilmington will be observed on Wednesday, August 8, under the auspices of the Mercantile Section of the Chamber of Commerce and affiliated stores, which will be designated by the display of the official emblem of the Section which will be shown prominently in store windows and on counters within official stores. this event will mark the outstanding opportunity for shoppers from all parts of the Peninsula and surrounding territory to secure bargains in a wide variety of merchandise seasonable just now, or of staple use. Wilmington has condicted these semi-annual Dollar Days for more than twenty years, and they are famous throughout the country because of the unusual opportunities offered everyone.

Unusual efforts have been made to make this the premier Dollar Day of the long series, and for weeks purchasing authorities of these stores have been combing the wholesale markets for additions to already widely diversified stocks, so they could give shoppers the benefit of the highest possible values at Dollar Day prices. Ample arrangements have been made to care for the crowds which surely will take advantage of this event, and every care has been taken to insure that visitors will have no cause for complaint.

Attendance at Wilmington Dollar Days has become a fixed custom with housewives of the Peninsula, Maryland, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and the number attending increases each year. Often it has been found necessary to arrange for 'traffic police' to handle the crowds in stores.

Arrangements have been made through the cooperation of Superintendent George Black of the Department of Public Saftey, and Chief of Police Howard Boyd, to extend the courtesies of that Department to visiting motorists, who should cut out the 'Courtesy Coupon' on page five and carry it with them when they go to Wilmington.

Dollar Day will be carried through on Wednesday, August 8, rain or shine. There will be no advance sales or so-called 'Courtesy Days.'
