NOW AND THEN

TREES! TREES- TREES

Our trees, 'All ye who have tears to shed prepare to shed them now."

It is very sad to see these friends which have shaded the streets so long, fall beneath the axe. Progress is a great thing, but it will be many years before the new trees which are to be planted will take the place of the old. Like many other things, they may be enjoyed by future generations.

JOYCE KILMER

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.

A tree whose hungry mouth is prest
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast;

A tree that looks at God all day
And lifts her leafy arm to pray;

A tree that may in summer wear
A nest of robins in her hair;

Upon whose bosom snow has lain;
Who intimately lives with rain.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

The mountain people are very hard to convince. They are very suspicious of any improvement or change.

One worker among them tells the following story:

Being urged by a mountain nurse to go and talk to the father of a poor little girl who badly needed a tonsilitis operation. He had refused his consent to having her treated and had sent a threatening message to the nurse I called on the father. He is "a poor white" and lives on a little farm a few miles out of the city.

I talked with him for an hour, standing in the hot sun outside his mountain cabin.

He was leading a dilapidated mule out of a dilapidated shed when I came to this clearing and we stood there between the shed and cabin talking.

After a full hour of arguing and explaining I gave it up.

"I am sorry, Mr. Craig," I said, "but perhaps you will change your mind."

"Well, I won't," he said, testily, "and nothing's going to make me. It is interfering with Nacher, I say, and I won't stand for it."

He spat a stream of tobacco juice with conclusive vehemence, swung a lean leg over his mule's back and rode off without another word.

In reading of the death and capture of Dillinger, one is impresses by the treachery of his friends.

Perhaps the best thing any one could have is a true loyal friend, one that can be trusted under all circumstances.

Such can hardly be found among the gangsters, who have no regard for the sancity of life, nor for personal property.

If one wishes a true friend, let him be true to the ideals of a good life, and the friends he finds there will stick closer than a brother.

Was there anything ever so welcome than the rain which came down upon the earth it when it was dry?

All nature waked up and took heart again. The sere brown grass seem to turn green while one was looking at it.

It is worth thousands of dollars to the county,' one farmer said.

We hope that the west will have the same refresing rain, and the desert lands be reclaimed.

Just to think of what a good rest Frank Kent has been giving the President and the Brain Trust by taking a vacation in Europe.

He has been like a stinging mosquito to them all this year.

It is to be hoped that he will come back to his country glad to be home and ready to give the Sun's readers descriptions of the countries abroad. It would be far more interesting to the subscribers.
