BEST AND BIGGEST CIGAR VALUE

FOSSILS AND FIZZELS

The hoax that fooled the Smithsonan scientists the past twenty years has just been exposed, and to use the parlance of a well known Broadway Columnist. 'The scientists faces are still red.' It seems that for the past two decades the brain trusters of the learned Smithsonian Institute at Washington have been proudly displaying a fossil ear of corn, as the oldest ear of corn on earth preserved, in the ground several thousand years, thus indicating, the corn was grown in very ancient times by the Indians of Old Peru. The hoax was discovered by Dr. Roland W. Brown, of the Geological survey department at Washington who found that the supposed fossil of corn was none other than cleverly molded clay baked to hardness in a slow fire and was no doubt the handiwork of an ancient peruvian craftsman. Oldtimers reading this interesting bit of scientific news will recall the ballaho which followed the discovery of the Cardiff Giant, and the success which that fraudulent fossil achieved before its true character was fully exposed. It now appears that the alleged print of a human foot, which was said to have been recently discovered on a slab of Connecticut sandstone, is another attempt to palm off a forged fossil upon a confiding community. Not only does the print of the foot furnish intrinsic evidence that it was made by the foot of a modern Connecticut farmer, but the slab itself proves to be a lump of artificial stone. The forger first made his slab and then put his foot in it. If he had not committed the rash mistake of using artificial stone, his deceit might have succeeded and geologists might have accepted it as a fatal blow to Moses and his cosmogony. The many instances of attempted fraud in the manufacture of fossils ought to call our attention to the fact that we are wholly at the mercy of the geologists in respect to fossils. Though the fraudulett character of the Cardiff giant and the ear of corn have been discovered, how can we tell how many equally wicked forgeries have escaped detection? The geologists have the whole matter in their own hands, and if they choose to show us the handle of a tertiary tooth brush and call it the tusk of a pilocene rhinoceros, we have no means of refuting their assertion. They go up and down over the surface of the earth with their hammers and pick-axes hunting for fossils and finding them in quantities so enormous as to necessarily awaken the suspicions of skeptical minds. They can boast that they know just where to dig for fossils, and will confidently assure a man, inside of whose house they have never ventured, that his back cellar is full of the remains of megalosaurians. If they would be satisfied to exhibit only complete skeletons of extinct animals, there would be some ground for accepting their assertions in regard to the preposterous beasts which they assure us existed in the dawn of the world's history; but when they show us a handful of teeth, or an old hoof, and insist that these relics form part of a lizard thirty two hands high, and decorated with green wings and sky blue proboscis, there is a tremendous strain on our credulity. The effrontery with which they thus request us to admit gigantic animals on the mere authority of a few inches of nondescript bone is really astonishing, no one doubts that fossils exist, and that very many of the fossils that are exhibited in our museums are genuine, the truth is, however, that the public is not in a position to discriminate between true and forged fossils, and is hence at the mercy of every unprincipled geologist. The Cardiff giant was skillfully made, and except that it was of gigantic size, there was nothing absolutely incredible in its appearance on the other hand, skilful palontologists have frequently made the most elaborate and impossible beasts out of plaster of Paris, as anyone who visited the Century of Progress at Chicago can verify and they ask us to believe that these Alley oop guardians of certain brands of crude oil were exact representations of extinct animals. We know that the Cardiff giant was an imposture, but we should be called all sorts of names if we refuse to believe in the improved lizards and patent combined fish which are being dug up in these depression times. Such animals may have existed in peroids when the universe was in a chronic state of delirium tremens, but it certainly requires a good deal of faith to believe in them and yet the very scientific person who scoffs at faith and professes to trust only to reason will thrust a shine bone six inches in length before the face of the public and remark that the man who does not believe that the bone is an icthyosaures seventy five feet long and eighteen feet wide is a bigoted foe to science. If we are to feel justified in believing in paleontology, we must be protected against forged fossils, we must not be left in a position where the footprints of a Connecticut deacon can be palmed off as the tracts of an extinct bird, or where the petrifide ear of a Tammany politician can be put in a museum and labelled 'a colliflower from the wastes of a majove desert.' All genuine fossils should be stamped by the Government, and all false fossils should be destroyed and their authors condemned to hard labor in geological quarries. We shall then be able to put reasonable confidence in the 'records of the rocks,' and be ready to investigate the origin and history of Paleolithic man.

The NEW McCormick-Deering Spreader Features an ALL-STEEL Box

THE new McCormick-Deering No. 4-A all-steel spreader is convenient, low to the ground, simple, and compact. It features a galvanized, rust-resisting, copperized, non-warping, heavy-gauge steel box of 60 to 70-bushel capacity. Eight roller bearings and Zerk lubrication, combined with perfect alignment of all parts, make this new all-steel spreader unusually light in draft. Two horses can haul capacity loads in it all day long.

Five spreading speeds are provided, permitting the use of just the right amount of manure at all times. The manure is torn and shredded by a saw-tooth upper beater, a spike-tooth lower beater, and a wide-spread spiral before it is spread in an even layer over the soil. A special endgate can be provided for use when liquid manure is to be hauled. A brake is available as special equipment. Also, there is a lime-spreading attachment which changes the No. 4-A into an efficient lime spreader.

See this new all-steel spreader at our store at your first opportunity.

5 MONTHS HEALTH REPORT

MEASLES AND WHOOPING COUGH INCREASE AVERAGE

Measles was responsible for more than half of the sickness from communicable diseases reported to the State Department of Health during the first half of the current year. From January 1 to June 30, inclusive, 46,615 total cases of notifiable diseases were reported to the Department, 30,206 in Baltimore City and 16,409 in the counties, in comparison with 25,052 cases during te crresponding period of 1933, 13,305 of which occurred in Baltimore City and 11,747 in the counties.

Of the 46,615 cases of communicable diseases reported this year, 26,079 were due to measles—18,419 in Baltimore City and 7,660 in the counties. Whooping cough was responsible for 4,349 cases—3,407 n Baltimore City and 942 in the counties—and the pneumonias added 2,228 cases to the total, 929 of which occurred in Baltimore City and 1299 in the counties. These three diseases made up over two thirds of the total from all the notifiable diseases—that is, the 'catching' diseases reported during the six months which ended on June 30 of this year. The remaining third was scattered among the fifty or more diseases on the reportable list.

During the corresponding period of last year, only 513 cases of measles, 1,023 of whooping cough and 1,692 cases of pneumoia wnere reported in the State.

This year's totals included 4 cases of malaria, 7 of pellagra, 5 of tularemia, 5 of poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis), 22 of undulant fever, 15 of typhus and Rocky Mountain spotted fever, and 124 cases of typhoid fever.

May with 12,683 cases of communicable disease, 8,681 in Baltimore City and 4,002 in the counties had the largest number reported in any one month. January, with 3,923 cases, 2,092 in Baltimore City and 1,731 in the counties the smallest number. June with a total of 4,643 cases, 2,793 in Baltimore City and 1,850 in the counties, came next. July as shown a very favorable decrease in sickness from the notifiable diseases.
