NOW AND THEN

THE SPLENDOR FALLS

The splendor falls on Castle walls
And snowy summits old in story:
The long light shakes across the lakes,
And the wild Cataracts leap in glory.
Blow bugle, set the wild echoes flying
Blow bugle, answer echoes, dying, dying, dying.

O hark, O hear! how thin and clear.
And thinner clearer farther going!
O sweet and far from cliff and scar
The horn of Elfland faintly blowing!
Blow let us hear the purple glens replying:
Blow bugle; answer echoes dying, dying, dying.

O love, they die in yon rich sky.
They faint on hill or field or river:
Our echoes roll from soul to soul,
And grow forever and for ever.
Blow bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying,
And answer echoes, answer, dying, dying, dying.

There is some beautiful modern poetry in this machine, scientific age, but those of us, who love music, always miss the rhyme, when it is in free verse. One thing that is pleasing in the Benztown Bard, rhyme seems to drop from the end of his fingers.

We hear much criticism of the older poets today, Longfellow. Tennyson and others. The poems that we learned in our childhood; The Psalm of life, The Builders, Locksly Hall and others, are considered mere platitudes by these moderns, but it would be hard to find among them a lovelier descriptive poem than the above by Tennyson. It is, like so many of his shorter poems, interwoven in his longer ones. This is found in 'The Princess.'

It is music all through and as one reads he sees the snow covered mountains, tinged by the setting sun, time old castles and hears the elflin sound of the bugle echoing from peak to peak.

'When music heavenly maid was young. She smote on all her chords with might,' says William Collins of long ago.

What a power music has on people. Even in heathen fable, they tell of Arion, playing on his flute while stone after stone obeyed his will, and took its place making the famous Wall of Troy. Those were fortunate who went to the musicale held at Mr. Herbert Hartman's Wednesday evening. The crowd gathered around the piano and sang the old songs, such as 'In the Gloaming.' Annie Laurie and many other appealing ones of 'Auld Lang Syne.'

Beside the choruses, in which all joined, sweet solos were sung and some fine instrumental pieces were played. No jazz was heard, throughout the evening, a rare happening in these times.

Well our Mrs. Harris has done herself proud, to use a slang expression. She has been visited by reporters and photographers and she is even pictured ringing the dinner bell, thus showing that in spite of writing a book, she has domestic duties as well.

We hear that her book is ranked among the best sellers of the month, and every one is wishing her wonderful success.

The summer, which is said by the weather bureau, to be the hottest for 60 years, is on the wane. Few bird notes, except the little song sparrow, are heard now and in the early darkness, that comes at this season of the year, we hear the night birds with their buzzing sounds. It is true that excessive heat is uncomfortable, but the writer for one, will be sorry to say, 'Goodby Summer, goodby.'

METHODIST MOVE TOWARD UNITY

MEETING TO BE HELD OCTOBER 11TH

The approaching Sesqui-Centennial to be held in Baltimore, October 10-14, in addition to celebrating the 150th anniversary of its organization, plans to discuss bringing into one body the Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, South, and the Methodist Protestant Churches. Seven million members with a constituency of twenty million are involved in the celebration Commissions appointed by the several General Conferences have been at work for some years arranging the details. Bishops William Frazier McDowell and Edwin DuBose Mouzon are Chairman of the Episcopal groups and Dr. John Calvin Broomfield of the Methodist Protestant group.

The following is the program for the unification meeting to be observed at the meeting Thursday, October 11th.

Dr. S. Parks Cadman, 'United Methodism in Protestantism.'

COMMUNICATION NOW AND BEFORE

ELECTRICITY BASIS OF CHIEF IMPROVEMENTS MADE

Communication was revolutionized with the use of electricity. Messages at one time were originated almost entirely between governments, princes and potentates. Military or naval considerations determined the degree of their importance. People of every walk of life today use telephone, telegraph and radio communication in their business and social affairs.

In the United States, users of the approximately 17,000,000 telephones make in the neighborhood of 70,000,000 calls each twenty-four hours. Telephone service from this country extends to the greater part of the globe, reaching more than fifty countries on five other continents. The spoken word has been speeded up to almost instantaneous speech. People thousands of miles apart converse by telephone as if they were face to face.

Before the inauguration of electrical communication the transporting of a message was quite an undertaking. In the early days of communication a letter or document, sign or symbol, was traced on paper or some physical object which was transported from its source of origin to its destination by rummers.

As early as the fifteenth century, B. C., couriers were sent from city to city and country to country with large and heavy letters of unbaked clay written in cuneiform script. After such messages had been written an embassy and a heavily armed escort protected the messenger from marauding bands.

WEDDINGS

Last Saturday afternoon Mr. J. Carl Starkey, of near Centreville, took as his bride Miss Bessie Elizabeth Warner, one of the popular young ladies of Rock Hall an da daughter of Mrs. John Jiles Warner and the late Mr. Warner. The ceremony was performed at Elkton by the Rev. Cope of the Methodist Church.

The bridal couple proceeded to Atlantic City for a short stay and arrived at the groom's home with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Starkey, Monday evening.

A shower was tendered the young couple last evening at the home of a sister of the bride, Mrs. Jewell Thompson, by a large number of Rock Hall friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Starkey will live near Centreville where the groom is a bookkeeper for Valliant Fertilizer Company.

Miss Thelma Brown, of Tallyville, Del., and Clarence T. Wilson, Jr., of Chestertown, were married in West Chester, Pa., on August 5.
