I always said, 'Some day I'll wander back again,' for I loved the old town with its colonial setting, and during all the changes of this modern age, I had thought of it just as it was, staid and unchanged as I had left it sleeping on the banks of the beautiful Chester River. And so the opportunity came and I have returned, but what a change! As I motored across the new bridge, I thought of the old one, that was one of the chief promenades for the people uptown and down town, meeting there to enjoy the cooling breezes from the river.

Although now there is a pedestrian way, and the breezes are just as cool, yet the automobiles and the trucks whizzing by make it a very different place for a promenade. In fact the old bridge seemed to suggest romance and the sweet story that has never grown old, was more often told on that bridge than elsewhere.

And when I reached the town what a change! We turned down by the George Perkins house of my day. It is now occupied by Mr. Bacchus and, though it is pretty and well kept yet a part of the large yard has been sold, and is occupied by Miss May Ireland's house while next door Mr. Donald Stam's home stands where the old stable used to be. Such a change there is. The remaining part of the street on that side was a row of houses, they say the quarters to the big house where Mr. Bacchus lives now.

My Memory recalls among those who lived there, old Uncle Ben Ringgold, one of the chief carters of the town, and Aunt Hannah Anderson, who with her brother, Ben Sheppard, used to carry milk around town in a tin bucket with pint and half pint cups to measure the milk in, these germ ridden days. Now these shacks have disappeared and, in their places stand the pretty homes of Mr. Harris, Mr. Usilton, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Metcalf and Mr. Kratzer. Some of these lots were reclaimed from the river, and sometimes in storms, 'old man river,' rises and swells, and seem to wish to claim them back again.

Across the street, if it could have been called a street in those days, but rather a grassy lane that led down to the river was the home of the florist, Mr. Massey. I remember the wealth of flowers that were there and how we used to love to go there to look at them. This is now the home of Mrs. John Urie, and though it is at present vacant, the lovely home that was built by Mr. Urie, looks well cared for. The remainder of that part of the street was a big field. In fact the only house on that big square which reaches through to Queen St. and faces Maple Avenue was the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Wilmer, then owned by Mr. Burton Burchinal. Now it is built up all around and we found that automobiles were lining the streets on both sides, horseless carriages that were never dreamed of in those days when the carriages were taken to the end of the street to be washed in the river. In fact, nearly every thing in this new town seems to be for the benefit of the cars which one sees everywhere. Trees, age old, have to give way to wider concrete streets As we turned down the other part of the street Mrs. Wickes large apartment house stands where the old bridge hill used to be, a green terraced hill, where the children would meet and play in the summer and slide down when there was snow and ice in the winter, a veritable village green and a meeting place for the young. I will tell in another chapter the many changes I see in the old town.

WHAT WOMEN WEAR METALLIC GLINTS

One of the most obvious signs of the fall season is seen in the metalic gleam in both silks and wools. Shiny little metal threads are woven into the fabric in such a way that only a sprinkle of glint covers the surface—the tendency is to sparkle in a subtle fashion, but not to shine at least not in day-time dresses.

It is true that in New York right now women are wearing for formal restaurant wear, black gowns with stunning jackets of metal cloth or silver lame—some of them metal striped white crepes that are quite dramatic and handsome, but this is the formal aspect of the picture which should not be confused with fabrics for general-wear purposes.

Business dresses and dresses for general daytime wear may be made of either wool or silk mixed with metallic threads, but the shiny lame is used only to face the ends of a collar, scarf or belt.

Two very prominent features of fall dresses to date are the flared back, commonly called the butcher-boy back after Molyneux, and the wrap-around skirt treatment.

SILK AND WOOL

The combination of silk and wool in the same dress will be found in a number of attractive styles introduced for early fall wear. Satin in combination with sheer wool and crepe will be very smart, and taffeta and moire are used in somewhat the same way—in yokes and bows and collars. You'll like the way the yokes and sleeves are fagotted on to the main part of the dress.

Dressmakers and home sewers will find this an excellent way to accent trimming lines when no other contrasting trimming is desired on the dress. The smart thig to do is plan your fagotting as the only trimming, and then wear a gold brooch or clip at the eckline matched to a belt buckle.

THE VILLAGE OF RUGBY

Thomas Hughes is best known as the author of those fine books. 'Tom Brown at Oxford' and Tom Brown at Rugby.

But one thing he tried to do was to establish a colony in America where young men of England would have a chance in this new land. So he laid out a town in Tennessee calling it Rugby. A dozen families came from England and many from New England to join the new colony.

They bought 40,000 acres in the Cumberland Mountain and for a time all was flourishing, but like many other idealists the settlers know little about farming and less about business and, so the scheme failed and most of the houses stand vacant, and it looks like many deserted villages.

But there is still a Gothic church there, a school house and a library of 7000 books which was given as a memorial to Thomas Hughes.

The few remaining families who remain there, are fine people, well read and refined in every way and maybe sometime the homes will again be filled with people.

RECIPES

Mary Pickford's Russian Tea With Jam

Scald earthenware pot, or glass tea pot, with boiling water; put one teaspoon of orange pekoe tea for each cup desired; measure freshly drawn water, and bring to bubbling boil before pouring it on the leaves; steep three to four minutes, sweeten to taste and add two teaspoons or orange jam to each cup of tea.

Orange Jam

12 thin-skinned oranges
3 lemons
16 cups (8 pounds) sugar

Wash and slice oranges and lemons as thi as possible. Add water and let stand over night. Cook slowly until tender (2 to 2 1-2 hours.). Add sugar. Cook the mixture until it jellies from a spoon (from 30 to 60 minutes). Pour into clean, hot jars, and seal at once.

Of course, the jam is also delicious as a spread for toast, crackers and biscuits.

DEL-MAR-VA RED CROSS TO MEET

TWO DAY SESSION TO BE HELD AT OCEAN CITY

Vice Chairman James L. Fieser of the American Red Cross will be the chief speaker at a conference of Red Cross workers from chapters in Delaware, Maryland and the peninsula counties in Virginia, to be held in Ocean City, Maryland, on Thursday and Friday, August 30 and 31. WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. ©1931 C. M. Co.
