A. & P. 75 YEARS OLD TODAY

The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company today announced plans for its 75th Anniversary celebration. This company started in 1859 as a single store on Vesey Street, New York. Today its anniversary sale will be celebrated by 90,000 employees in 15,000 stores serving 6,000,000 customers a day.

J. T. Patten, the oldest living member of the organization, gave reporters an eyewitness account of the company's growth.

'My first job with A & P was in May 1875,' said Mr. Petten. 'The company was then sixteen years old and had only twelve stores, but a large mail order business.

'I remember well the first store I worked in. We sold only tea and coffee. Blending was done locally, if a customer found a blend too weak or too strong, she brought it back and the blend was changed to suit her taste.

'That early store would probably be considered rather ornate today. On the walls were great oil paintings of Chinese scenes. A gallery ran around the store half-way between floor and ceiling. From this gallery hung a multitude of bird cages with canaries, cockatoos and parrots; and to complete the picture there was a large fountain in the center of the store in which goldfish swam. In the center of the ceiling hung a giant chandelier with many white, gas-illuminated globes on it. Glass prisms hung from under each light. These were always carefully taken off in the early summer and the whole was covered with mosquito netting. The prisms were always washed, polished and replaced in the fall. In the windows there were a great many illuminated gas globes in arched rows.

'A year later I was moved to 53d street on Eighth Avenue. In 1876 this was the farthest north the company had reached and just about as far north as New York City had reached, for north of Fifty-nnth Street there were only shanties through which ran the Boulevard, now renamed Broadway. In this store we sold tea, coffee and sugar under the smiling sun of a Chinese scene painted on the walls over the tea bins. To this Fifty-third Street store many farmers used to come from the country that lay north of Fifty-ninth Street to do their ordering for several weeks.'

When asked about the famous blizzard of '88, Mr. Patten told how he walked for miles to open his store, an hour and a half late. The sales that day were $2.86, and it was three nights before he was able to go home.

'I have lived in the greatest seventy-five years of the world's history,' continued Mr. Patten. 'Never before in history has there been a period of such constant and rapid change. Light, heat, power, transportation, communication, entertainment, medicine, everything from the maternity ward to the undertaker's parlor has either come into being or been drastically changed during those seventy-five years. This is not true of any other 75 years in history. For thousands of years people lived pretty much as their fathers lived. American colonists used the same crude grease lamps and the same tallow candles that the ancient Egyptians used. No major improvement had been made in artificial illumination for ten thousand years. Then came the development of kerosene and gas, then electricity. And all this in the last three quarters of a century.

'These changes, of course, affected every phase of life and every activity in America. I saw them from a grocery counter, and saw their effect on food retailing. When things changed food stores changed with them. I remember the great railroad building of the seventies and eighties, and saw how more foods became available and how our own company grew as a result of it. I remember the first automobile I ever saw, and I, too, yelled 'get a horse.' But soon, with automobiles trucking foods to new outlying stores, and with customers coming to stores from greater distances, food stores grew into complete grocery stores with wide assortments. It became less and less necessary to deal with customers by mail, or send our wagons out to their houses to solicit orders.

'Customers began to depend on the new canned foods, on fresh vegetables summer and winter, on individually packaged foods instead of bulk. Retailing grew up with America, every development in American life had its effect on our business.

'Today I marvel when I compare the food business of fifty a ndseventy-five years ago with modern, efficient, wasteless food distribution as we know it today.'

The development of retail food distribution with the growth of America is portrayed in a series of posters by Louis Fancher to be displayed in A & P stores during the 75th Anniversary
