"Nerves" "NERVES" "Nerves"

Dr. Miles NERVINE "Did the work" says Miss Glivar WHY DON'T YOU TRY IT?

After more than three months of suffering from a nervous ailment, Miss Glivar used Dr. Miles Nervine which gave her such splendid results that she wrote us an enthusiastic letter.

If you suffer from "Nerves." If you lie awake nights, start at sudden noises, tire easily, are cranky, blue and fidgety, your nerves are probably out of order.

Quiet and relax them with the same medicine that "did the work" for this Colorado girl.

Whether your "Nerves" have troubled you for hours or for years, you'll find this time-tested remedy effective.

PURE LINES IN DOG BREEDS

YOUR DOG AND MINE

(By EDWARD C. LOUD, JR.)

In genetics, the science of breeding one frequently finds the term pure line used. Sometimes we find the term applied to breeds of animals or more properly, to strains within the breeds. Geneticists sometimes object to this use of the word, because they point out that a pure line is strictly the progency of a single self-fertilized individual. This organism will be the ancestor of many offspring in this way and there will be variation among them. There is variation everywhere in nature. Now if the largest of the pure line be mated together; they will produce offspring which vary around a definate standard. None of them is ever larger than the upper limit, and none smaller than the lower.

If the smallest ones are mated they produce offspring which likewise vary around a standard, but none is smaller than the smallest in the pure line. No matter how much breeding done, the offspring stay within the upper and lower limits.

In other breeds of dogs we have a comparable situation. It is true that they are not all the progency of a single self-fertilized individual, but the same principle holds and we can call it a pure line for want of a better name. We find in breeding that there are limits above which we cannot go no matter how much we breed, so long aas we adhere to the same dock. And this is useful because there are lower limits as well as upper limits. These hereditary limits are what maintain standards among the breeds.

For instance a Boston Terrier breeding has a strain with which has been worked on for years. You want to breed smaller dogs and wonder why you cannot do it. You breed only from th smallest and sell the largest. But every generation the larger ones keep coming. That is simply because you have approximated a pure line and you should expect variation in it. The only way you can produce smaller dogs is to bring in some outside germplasm which will make it possible, because the new breeding will furnish the smaller size. The same principle holds good for a Saint Bernard owner who tries to breed more gigantic animals. He continually finds puppies among the progency which are not nearly as large as the kind he desires. This is because he is breeding from the largest ones and the variation is natural. He is using individuals near the upper limit. Only a mutation or sudden change in the germplasm will make it possible for him to achieve an extra size.

Well, if we understand the principle of pure lines, it makes it so much easier to understand why it is that the great dog so seldom produces dogs as good as he. He is the upper end of the pure line and the natural expectancy is that his progency shall be downward. The bulk of them will vary around a medium just about as the center of a pure line. There will be some inferior to them and some superior, but as you approach the limits the numbers dwindle.
