DR. BLACKWELL ADDRESSES P. T. A.

ADVOCATES AGRICULTURAL COURSE IN C. H. S.

On Monday evening, November 12, Dr. J. D. Blackwell State Director of Vocational Education addressed the P. T. A. of the Chestertown High School at the high school. The theme of Dr. Blackwell address dealt with the possibility of instituting a course in agriculture in the local high school. He pointed out very clearly that such a course is an absolute necessity in a rural community, such as this, and showed that such a course can be had at practically no additional cost to the county. The speaker explained that the colleges and universities were admitting graduates in agriculture as well as those who took the academic course. The talk was very interesting and inspiring and it is hoped that the course may be instituted n the near future so that boys of Kent County may obtain a scentific education in farming.

WASHINGTON COLLEGE FAME SPREADS

The fact that Washington College has gained recognition in all parts of the country was emphasized on October 14th, when the Birmingham News Age Herald, of Birmingham, Alabama contained a full page illustrated article on Washington College in the magazine section of that paper.

The article was written by James Saxton Childers who staged a week at Dr. Mead's home here, and contained pictures of commencement exercises last June together with numerous quotations of the love and esteem with which he was held at Birmingham-Southern College. It contained quotations by the faculty and student body and showed that Dr. Mead's work in that institution was worthwhile.

Leaving Birmingham the article then shifted to Chestertown and was very flattering in the description of Washington College, Chestertown, and the Eastern Shore.

NOW AND THEN

Perhaps we have all told the story of the 'Hare and the Tortoise,' running a race, how the hare would stop to eat a bit of grass, or rest in the cool shade while his opponent kept toiling on and on, reaching the desired goal before his swift companion get there, thus winning the race. But in winning the race, how much he did miss that his companion enjoyed, the beautiful sunshine, the green fields, listening to the song of birds and a host of other things. Perhaps those who drudge always, would be better winners if they paused to see the beauty around them.

The following poem carries out that idea:

THE HARE SPEAKS

He won the race, I grant you, that slow beast,
Who cannot lift his eyes above the ground.
He took the path that led straight to the east,
And did not pause, or turn, or look around.
Unconscious of the robin, of the bee,
Deaf to the cricket, blind to every flower,
Insensible to all sweet odors, he
Ticked off each mile as clocks tick off the hour.

Sirs, he was meant for plodding. In his breast
There is no fire, nor rapture in his soul.
And judge, I ask you, if he travels best
Who creeps through life half brother to the mole.
For when the day is spent, the journey done,
And he has reached the mark, that has he won?

Julia Johnson Davis.

One has only to look at a copy of Godey's Ladies Book of seventy years ago to see how times and fashions have changed in the last two generation. Imagine a lady who hardly dared to show her dainty ankle in those days, wearing a bathing suit of the present period. Imagine a lady who was taught to hold her lips in a certain position after saying 'prunes and prisms' with her feet in a certain position, sitting with legs crossed, smoking a cigarette. Perhaps after all the women of today are more independent and more intelligent and accomplish more in the world than they did in those old days. But there is a feelng of regret at the passing of those dainty beings who were looked upon as home makers and beings to be looked after and protected. Now one finds them every here, elbowing their way through a crowd of men, who keeps their seats in the streets cars and teams, while the feminine stands clinging to the strap.

It is a great gratification to those who are interested in the upkeep of the town to see a boxwood hedge planted around the South Park opposite Emmanuel Church on one side and the First National and the Peoples banks on the other. Some remember this as a fine place in which weeds could grow, and also the time and labor that it took to haul the dirt and to convert it into its present shape.

This enterprise was undertaken by the Town Improvement Club, led by Mrs. Barroll, an ardent worker in the cause.

Some remember, too, when it was talked of making of it a pound for horses, as the hitching posts, owing to the concrete streets, were removed from the front of the stores. What a number of petitions were carried around in protest against it!

It is also a gratification to the friends of the late Mrs. Hope H. Barroll that the hedge is a memorial to her as she labored hard for the improvement of the town. The Garden Club is to be congratulated on the choice of a memorial to her.

In fact were we to be asked for a suitable name for the square we would suggest, 'Memorial Park,' the monument to the Civil War Soldiers being there, the flag pole and other memorials which are to be added.

Seekers after thrilles are trying the air, racing in autos and sailing the oceans in small crafts. Now they are trying to dive into the deep blue sea. Many, who have been diving, are enthusiastic over the beauties of the great deep; of its coral, shells and seaweed, and its vari-colored fish.

Lately they have begun to dive near Hell's Gate, that stormy entrance to New York Bay. One, Mr. Simon Lake is going to try with a huge vacuum cleaner to lift up the treasure which was sunk with the liner, Hussar, in 1780. It was loaded with gold, and plans have been made to reach it many times but as yet it lies buried in the sea.

HOG-KILLING TIME NEARS

NEW HOG PROCESS TAX REGULATIONS INTEREST FARMERS

Farmers who are accustomed to sell dressed hogs or hog products should not forget the hog processing tax regulations.

As a result of a redefinition of the term 'first domestic processing,' (effective November 1st, 1934) farmers are liable for the processing tax only with respect to hog products sold (from hogs of their own raising) direct to consumers in excess of the exemptions allowed under the tax regulations. No tax is required to be paid by the producer who slaughtered his own hogs and who sells or exchanges directly with consumers, not more than 300 pounds of the products derived therefrom during any marketing year.' Tax is payable on amount sold between 300 and 1000 lbs. restored to liveweight basis. If any hog products are sold in excess of 1000 pounds, the exemption on the 300 pounds is lost and all hogs represented by the products sold are subject to the processing tax. The amount of tax payable on a given amount of products is determined by restoring those products to a liveweight basis. Conversion factors are used for this purpose. Your County Agent has these conversion factors and will aid you in your hog-processing tax problems.

Farmers may sell live hogs of their own raising (owned at time of farrowing) to another person, and subsequently butcher the hogs for consumption by that person (none to be sold to others) without being subject to the processing tax, because he is not slaughtering for market.

Farmers who are to pay processing tax will note the following: The return is due and the tax is required to be paid on or before the last day of the month immediately following the processing or slaughtering.'

CHRISTMAS TUBERCULOSIS SEALS

With the opening of the twenty-eighth annual Christmas Seal Sale scheduled for Thanksgiving Day, the Maryland Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated branches have completed plans to send out more than 200,000 direct mail appeals throughout the State.

The Christmas Seal this year has been designed in commemmoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the one-room cottage that became the nucleus of the entire sanatorium at Saranac Lake in 1885. The Christmas Seal this year shows a picture of the Little Red as the cottage is known.

In commenting upon the Seal Sale, William B. Matthews, Managing Director of the Maryland Tuberculosis Association said, 'Much has been accomplished in the campaign against tuberculosis since the first Christmas Seal was sold in 1907. During that time the death rate from tuberculosis has been cut by more than sixty per cent and many thousands of lives have been saved or prolonged. Tuberculosis, today, is still a major health problem and accounts for more deaths between the ages of 15 and 45 than any other disease. It is estimated that nine million children under 15 years of age in the United States today are infected with the germs of tuberculosis. These children may be protected, however, by safe-guards which are made possible by the annual Christmas Seal sale.'

The activities of the Tuberculosis Association in Maryland include the work at the Miracle House at Claiborne, Maryland, which has been maintained since 1919 as a preventorium for children who have been living in contact with tuberculosis. Another activity of the Association which was started in 1924 is the system of state-wide free chest clinics. These clinics have been attended by more than 30,000 Marylanders. Christmas Seals also help to maintain a year-round health education program and assistance in medical research. The campaign will continue until Christmas.
