DODSWORTH AT FORDS

COMING TO BALTIMORE AFTER LONG RUN IN NEW YORK

Monday night, January 28th, comes to Ford's Theatre, Baltimore, the play that all are waiting to see: 'Dodsworth,' with Walter Huston starred in the title role, and Fay Bainter and Nan Sunderland in the parts they played so brilliantly throughout the run of 353 performances enjoyed by this attraction in New York.

'Dodsworth,' it is amost superfluous to state, is taken from Sinclair Lewis' popular novel of the same name. The dramatization was made by Sidney Howard. The fourteen settings, and the two revolving stages, which shift the scenes almost kaleidiscopically, were designed by Jo Mielziner. The stage director was Robert Sinclair and the producer Max Gordon, all in all in imposing aggregation of creative talent.

The scenes of 'Dodsworth' alternate between Zenith, an unidentfied town in the middle west (it might be Akron or Terre Haute or Battle Creek) and various points in Europe—London, Paris, Montreaux, Berlin and Naples, with a couple of episodes on the Steamship Ultima.

Samuel Dodsworth is a typical, solid, successful, American business man who adores his wfe, Fran, and their daughter, but has been so immersed in the affairs of the Revelation Motor Company that he is more the prosaic husband and provider than the romantic lover she desires. Fran persuades him to retire from business and take her to Europe so that she can step out and 'see life' while she is still young.

Europe, and the gallant attentions of audacious young Englishmen and Continentals, go to Fran's head. She loses her balance and, despite Dodsworth's endeavors to save her, slips and falls. Still he tries to win her back, but her selfishness, vanity and venom are insufferable, and when she would divorce him to marry a German baron, Dodsworth finds solace in a sympathetic and understanding young expatriate, Edith Cortright.

END OLD KITCHEN DISPUTES OVER HOW TO ROAST MEAT

No longer can there be family feuds and neighborhood warfore on the subject of how to perfecty roast a piece of meat. Developments in cooking methods have finally answered the old disputes over when to salt and whether to sear; add water, or baste, so conclusively that such debates are necessarily over, states Miss Inez S. Willson, noted home economist.

The Question of Salting

Salting before or after roasting has been th quarrel of two schools of cookery for years. Now, says Miss Willson, both sides have been proved halfway right. For example, those who salted after the roasting was done for fear of drawing out the juices of the meat learn that very little of the meat exposed. Also what little does escape due to the action of the salt only improves the flavor of the gravy.

The opposing faction, which stood for salting before roasting to bring out the flavor, learns that the salt penetrates only an inch or so into the roast, making materially little difference in the flavor other than in the outside slices. However, the fact that it is easier to salt the roast and then forget about it leaves this school a little in the lead.

Searing Not Advocated

Searing has long been a moot question. Cooks have, for a long time, been told of th value of searing to keep in the juices. Present studies show the unseared roast to be just as juicy as the seared one and it also boasts the advantage of not needing such careful watching. Searing's only value lies in improving the color and flavor of the outside slices.

Basting a Waste of Time

Basting roasts has gone out with searing. The up to date cook places her roast in the open pan, fat side up, and lets the melting fat baste the meat. If the roast lacks fat of its own, she has the market man wrap it with cod or back fat to do the work.

To Cover or Not to Cover

No roast is covered during cooking. They are all placed in an open pan upon a small rack or trivet to keep them up from the bottom of the roaster, and under no circumstances is water added. The old scheme of adding a little water has been found to make a roast less delicious and (strangely enough) less juicy.

Temperature Important

A slower oven is now being advocated for al roasting, and, for that matter, slower cooking for all cuts of meat. A roast may even be started in a cold oven, and then cooked at a constant low temperature.

Roast-Meat Thermometer

The use of the roast-meat thermometer in determining how long to roast the meat is being stressed more and more. Approximate estimation may be made of the time by weight time tables, but for greatest ease and accuracy the thermometer plan is unrivaled. If you use a meat thermometer, remember, however, to insert the bulb so it touches the center of the lean meat and rests on neither fat nor bone.

CONGRESSMAN GOLDSBOROUGH ENTERTAINS COLLEAGUES

Washington, Jan. 23—Representative T. Alan Goldsborough, (Dem. Md.) Ranking Member of the Banking and Currency Committee, was the host yesterday at a Wild Duck Luncheon in the Speakers' Dining Room for Senator George L. Radcliffe, and the Maryland delegation.

It has been Mr. Goldsborough's custom for several years to entertain his colleagues at a special duck luncheon at which the Speaker of the House has been included.

Those present were: Speaker Byrns, Senator Radcliffe, Representative Henry B. Steagall, Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee; Representative Robert Crosser, Chairman of the Steering Committee; and the following Maryland Members; Representative Vincent L. Palmisano, William P. Cole and David J. Lewis.

Edwin G. Cover, of Easton, Maryland, gave Congressman Goldsborough the ducks for the luncheon.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS

A very fresh egg has practically no 'air cell' and is therefore too 'full' to make a good hard boiled egg. Its fullness causes it to stick to the shell.

Most of the hens in a flock can be kept in laying until about November 1, when they should be allowed to rest about six weeks.

The washing away of soil from farm lands has resulted in destruction for agricultural purposes of 35,000,000 acres.

Production of maple sugar in Maryland in 1934 was 18,000 pounds as compared with 25,000 pounds the year previous. The production of sirup was 17,000 gallons as compared with 25,000 gallons in 1933. Farm price for sugar was 13 cents a pound and sirup brought $1.10 a gallon during 1934.

There are vast areas, particularly in the mountain sections, on watersheds of important streams, where a continuous forest cover is essential to the public welfare of the people and industries, perhaps many miles away. These forests, according to F. W. Besley, State Forester for Maryland, are, therefore, a public concern and should be in public ownership.
