AS PREDICTED LAST week, the sales tax has been passed by the Maryland Legislature although, instead of a two percent retail tax it was changed to a one per cent gross sales tax. Governor Nice has not signed the bill but at the time of going to press every indication pointed to his approval as it is apparently the only remaining means to raising the States share of the funds to be used for relef in Maryland. The bill assures the continuation of relief on the present large scale and those who have been the benefactors of it can rest easy and know that they will continue to be cared for. Now that the working residents of Maryland know that they are directly paying for relief there will be a wholesale grab by each county for as much of the funds as can be secured because there is a certain sum to be spent in the State and the county that does not take advantage of all it can get will mean more for some other county or Baltimore City. This is particularly true following recent rulings that as much of the relief funds as possible shall be used in the form of work relief meaning public improvements with free labor. Instead of the general opinion that relief should be gradually tapered off and become a thing of the past, the action of the Legislature points to relief as a permanent burden.

THE SALES TAX on the surface appears to be a tax of one per cent on the gross sales by merchants of the State and is apparently designed to be paid out of the pockets of those merchants and business men. However with the present financial conditions of the merchants in the State, particularly in the counties, they will find it necessary to pass the tax on the consumer. Then again the question arises as to what sales the tax affects and how it will be paid. The bill specifically states that the tax must be paid on all tangible sales to the ultimate consumer, including sales by merchants, manufactures or individuals. Farm products sold in bulk to commission merchants, stores, etc., are exempt but apparently sales by farmers of eggs, vegetables, butter, meats to the house wife are not exempt. Thn again the fisherman who sells his fish or oysters to the housewife must also consider the tax when he makes his sales. One cent on the dollar in grass business done is not a very high tax put the details in paying the tax deserves considerable consideration. All of the above tradesmen must make a monthly report to the Comptroller showing their gross sales together with one per cent of same in cash. With the tremendous detail involved there is a question of just how much of the tax can actually be collected.

FIRE AT FIRE HOUSE

A short circuit in the wiring on the outside of the fire house caused a flame to flash out of the conduit up near the cupola where the siren is located. Either the blast of the siren either blew the fire out or the blaze was frightened to death when it saw the fire fighting volunteers assembling, but whatever it was only a few puffs of smoke were visable when the firemen arrived. This made it a job for electricians rather than firemen.
