AN ILL WIND

The Rev. O. B. Newton, of Cambridge, Md., pastor of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, South, received a letter from the Rev. Hal F. Schenck, of Freemont, Nebraska, last week, relative to the dust storms in the West. The letter follows; 'A farmer was trying to drive cattle to a place of safety during a heavy 'black blizzard' when it suddenly started raining heavily. As the rain poured muddily down from the clouds, the farmer heard a number of peculiar thudding noises on the ground around him. He investigated and found the ground nearly covered with ducks. They had been blinded by dust, then loaded down with mud and forced to earth. The farmer and a cowhand picked up about one hundred of them, took them to the house and washed them off, then put them in the coop with the chickens.' All of which, is indeed a bit of encouraging news coming at a time when farmers have been ploughing under every third row.

If we are to believe in the age old axiom of mother nature providing the balance in supply and demand' this cosmical phenomina will surely have a tendancy to convince the most skeptical of minds. However doubtful it may seem to look forward to more of these atmospheric showers, we need only to consult history to find out that we have had some rare showers in the past; as occurred a few years ago in Kentucky. One day a Mrs. Crouch, of Olympian Springs, Ky.; was employed in the open air and under a particulary clear sky, in the celebration of those mysterious rites by which the housewife transmutes scraps of meat, bones, and effects overshoes into soap. Suddenly there decended upon her a gentle shower of meat. It fell impartially upon the presumably just Mrs. Crouch and her unjust cat, and the latter, conceitedly assuming that his merits had been signally recognized, immediately gorged himself with the public breakfast so unexpectedly tendered to him. the meat was served in the shape of hash, and its particles ranged in size from a delicate shred as light as a snowflake, to a solid lump three inches square. It was in a raw state, but it was obviously perfectly fresh. Two Kentucky Gentlemen in prosperous circumbstances, and accustomed to eating meat, tasted it and pronounced the opinion that it was either venison or mutton; whence came this remarkable rain? It had not been predicted by the Weather Bureau, and it could not have been the result of the blowing up of a distant boarding house in as much as no trace of bones, buttons, and other components of hash of commerce could be discovered by the most searching analysis. The most obvious conclusion is that the Kentucky shower unlike the Nebraska duck shower was really a meteroric shower according to the present theory of astronomers, an enormous belt of meteroric stones constanly revolve around the Sun, and when the earth comes in contact with this belt she is soundly pelted. Similarly, we may suppose that there revolves about the Sun a belt of venison, mutton, ducks, and other meat, divided into small fragments, which are precipitated upon the earth whenever the latter crosses their path. Of course, the scientific persons will sneer at this explanation inasmuch as they have not been first to propose it, and will deny that there are any grounds whatever for the belief in the existance of cosmical meat, but if they believe in the hypothetical belt of meteroic stones, simply because certain stones occasionally fall upon the earths surface, as occurred in dud form at Rock Hall a few weeks ago, why should they not believe in a possible belt of ducks and fresh meat, If they revive the theory—now generally abandoned—that the meteroic stones are fragments of an exploded planet, then we may require them to admit that the Kentucky shower consisted of fragments of exploded inhabitants who formerly occupied the wicked planet, when once the scientific men accept the hypothesic of cosmical meat they will tell us what a grand and solemn thought it is, that at a distance of whole states full of figures, most Nebulae of finely comminuted meat are circling steadily around the Sun. They will tell us how astronomers, and stratosphere ballonists, have profoundly learned in chalk and blackboards and filled full to the lips with logorithms and relativity, saw that the falling meat and muddy ducks postulated the existance of a meat belt Whatever theoutsome of our future investigations along this line we hope that mother nature will live up to the adage of balancing supply and demand and sprinkle a few hard hit depression areas with a few inexpensive, but useful showers of such materials as dried beef, pickles, or condensed milk.
