

YOUR DOG AND MINE

FEEDING, CARE AND GENERAL MANAGEMENT

By EDWARD C. LOUD, JR.

As the pups grow they may have bits of small puppy biscuits to nibble as this assists in teething. A good plan is ot give the youngsters round, smooth bones or large broken pieces of dog cakes to play with. Both are an excellant help in teething and the latter also teaches them from infancy to like the taste of plain, wholesome food.

Newly weaned puppies need very constant feeding if they are expected to thrive, but it is a great mistake to supply them with large quantities to eat at one time or to leave the feeding vessels beside them too long. At this period of their existence, as at all others, it is desirable to provide them with a variety of diet.

It is unfortunate that few owners are lucky enough to rear a litter without some of the puppies falling sick, but, on the other hand, most of the infantile diseases are quite easy to cure if properly attended to. The owner should carefully watch his young stock, that immediate steps may be taken to deal with any ailments. If a puppy shows signs of losing flesh and strength, a part of his daily diet should consist of Cod Liver Oil.

As the puppies grow older and increase in strength the number of their meals may be diminished so that, by the time they have left their dam for a month, four feeds a day will be their allowance. It is of course necessary that they should have plenty of room to romp in, but it must be remembered that exposure to cold and damp is particularly injurious to young and growing animals. On this account a covered run is recommended.

Later on they should be allowed to exercise themselves in a dry yard or field. To prevent their growing up shy, it is a good plan to accustom them to the sight of unfamiliar objects, for it is far easier to prevent shyness in a dog than it is to eradicate that evil afterwards. The larger breeds require even more exercise than the smaller ones, as the weight of their bulky frames is apt to interfere with the proper development of the limbs, and, to a want of sufficient gentle exercise when a puppy, many a fine bodied dog owes his twisted muscles, cow hocks, or splay feet. A preventive of early weakness in growing puppies will be found in Calcium Phosphate which should be mixed with the puppies food. The advantages that follow the administration of this tasteless and harmless preparation can scarcely be estimated.

Puppies usually are well over their teething troubles and get their second teeth by the time they are nine months old, but the age at which the first teeth are shed and their successors appear varies greatly. Some pups have their second teeth before they are five months of age, though this is quite the exception. Loose teeth should be looked for and removed, or they may possibly press the ones that follow them out of place. However, premature operations of the kind are not to be recommended, as they cause unnecessary suffering to the dogs and frequently cause more harm than good.

It is during these early stages of their life that most dogs contract Distemper. Though not inevitable most dogs do contract this highly contagious disease, and many valuable lives are lost as a result. Second cases are very rare. At the same time it must be borne in mind that the young animal that has been brought up properly and whose constitution has not been weakened by improper food is far more likely to make good a recovery than one that has been neglected by its owner. Consequently, due attention to the principles of rearing puppies laid down above is likely to have the effect of enabling them to combat the disease.

PLAYING SAFE

The hotel clerk was growing impatient as the prospect took so long to read the names on the register. 'Just sign on that line, please,' said the clerk.

The prospect was indignant and retorted: 'Young man, I'm too old a hand to sign anything without readin' it.'
