Courts, to give the accused a fair and speedy trial and to save expense to the taxpayers of the State.

In speaking of the two laws recently passed by the Maryland Legislature whereby cases which involve the larceny of goods valued at less than $25 may be disposed of in the Police Justice courts, and also the law continuing the Grand Jury subject to call, Mr. Collins said:

"The effect of these few new laws passed all within the past two years, has been amazing. From information received from many counties of the State, the volumn of criminal work before the Circuit Courts has been greatly reduced. Instead of Grand Juries sitting for days examining witnesses as to minor violations of the law, which are now disposed of by Justices of the Peace with right to appeal, the grand juries can now be occupied in investigating more serious violations of the law. In the past two years, in many of the smaller counties of the State, the grand juries are often in session not longer than two or three days, twice a year, with the same results accomplished.

In the presecution of major crimes, the counties, with a few exceptions, have been handicapped by the lack of an adequate detective force. Experienced detectives cannot be hired without great expense to the taxpayers. In the past, when a major crime has been committed, the local officers, having no finger-print equipment or other up-to-date criminal devices for the detection of crime, having been compelled to call upon the Baltimore City Police Department for assistance. This assistance has been gladly provided when the equipment and men could be spared from the City force. At times, however, this assistance cannot be given. It is hoped the law passed at the 1935 session creating a State Police Force will remedy this situation. With an adequate finger-print system established through the State Police in the counties, great progress will be accomplished in the detection and prosecution of crime."

"An effort has been made in a number of States to provide for the attendance of witnesses from out the State and this is known as the Uniform Witness Bill. This Act paves the way for reciprocity with other States who adopt it, to compell the attendance of witnesses from out the State. All parts of Maryland being near adjoining States, it is a very simple matter for witnesses to avoid summons by going over the State line, thereby severely handicapping either the State or the defense, or both, in the trial of criminal cases. A Bill along the lines of the Uniform Witness Bill was introduced at the 1935 session, but failed to pass. Such a law would materially aid in the administration of the criminal law.

"On account of the large number of deaths caused by the negligent operation of motor vehicles and the difficulties experienced by the State in obtaining convictions for these offenses where the maximum punishment is ten years, juries probably considering such maximum punishment excessive, a Bill was introduced in the 1935 session to reduce the maximum penalty for this offense to three years. This passed both the House and the Senate but failed to become a law."

"Another Bill which did not pass in the 1935 session was a bill to provide for uniform criminal extradition, making it easier to extradite criminals from one State to another. This Bill passed three readings in the Senate, and later an "Ice Cream Bill" was substituted and passed in its place."

"In these times where it is easily possible for criminals to travel long distances in a short space of time, the counties of Maryland should and must have up-to-date enforcement agencies and equipment to deal successfully with the prosecution of major crime. The counties of Maryland bounding on and being very near the States of Delaware, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia and District of Columbia, and within a short distance of some of the largest cities in the United States should be alive to the situation that major crime is within easy access of our doors. The people of the counties of Maryland living mostly in rural communities, being scattered, and without means of protecting their homes against the marauder, are intensely interested and families and will, I am sure, co-operconcerned in the protection of their ate with the Maryland Bar Association in its endeavor to provide for the swift and certain punishment of violators of the criminal laws of Maryland.' SHORE SEAFOOD INDUSTRY ORGANIZED

HELD MEETING AT SALISBURY FRIDAY

Leaders in the seafood industry from Maryland, Virginia and Delaware met at the Wicomico Hotel in Salisbury last Friday afternoon and organized the Tri State Seafood Association. L. A. Lockerman, prominent Crisfield packer was elected the President: George Harrison of Tilghman's, Maryland, was elected Vice-President; and Sterling G. Harris, of Centreville, Maryland, Secretary-treasurer.

'Every person connected with the seafood business in these three states is being invited to affiliate with this Association,' said Mr. Lockerman. 'Local organizations will not be disturbed. It is expected that this larger association will be the rallying point for smaller organizations and for individuals. As an industry we must consolidate our strength so that our needs and demands will be met.'

'In Maryland alone, 30,000 people earn their livelihoods from the bay and its tributaries. Most of these persons now suffer because of the decreased catches of fish, oysters and crabs.'

'Our first objective,' continued Mr. Lockerman, 'will be to see that the new Tydings bill, which prevents the taking of sponge crabs and places its regulation and enforcement in the hands of the U. S. Government, is passed by the present Congress. This one law properly enforced will restore our crab supply to its 1931 level. At present the crab industry is threatened with destruction. Hundreds are unemployed this season because of the crab scarcity. Unless something is done now, there will be no crabs next year.'

'Before the oyster season opens a convention will be held in Ocean City when the larger problems of this branch of the bsuiness will be studied carefully.'

'Every effort will be made to develope a strong and permanent organization,' said Mr. Lockerman. 'Only the larger problems of the industry such as the seafood supply and the markets will be dealt with. Its effectiveness will lie in the numbers represented in its membership.

'Attempts wil be made to eliminate friction between the states and have laws passed in each state which will not conflict as regards seasons, methods of catching and other regulations.'

TAKE YOUR CHOICE

"Every man is entitled to his opinions."

"Yes, but some opinions are like malaria, excusable, perhaps, under the circumstances, but nothing to be proud of."

JUST LIKE A MAN

Mr. Grouch—I tell you, you will have to cut down on your extravagance—this pace will ruin us!

Mrs. Grouch (pouting)—You might have waited till after my birthday to mention it.

NOT WORRYING

"Somebody has stolen your auto, Mr. Street."

"That's all right. The thief will bring it back when he finds out how much gasoline it takes to run it."

Old Whaling Trips Kept Sailors Away Four Years

In the old days of the whaling industry, the men who went to sea in search of these prized creatures of the deep were often gone from home as long as three or four years at a time.

Each whaling ship, says a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, carried four sharp-prowed boats. When a whale was sighted these boats were let down into the water, each one manned by a helmsman, four oarsmen and a headsman. The helmsman carried sharp harpoons, to which lines were attached, and threw them into the body of the whale.

Then began a great battle. The headsman attacked the whale with lances, but the maddened monster often dragged the boat for many miles through the water. Often, too, he dived to the bottom, and the lines on the harpoons that held him paid out for thousands of feet.

Eventually, however, the whale had to come back to the surface to breathe, and then he was killed by a lance thrust in a vital spot.

Today most whalers are strongly built iron ships, and the small boats are equipped with cannons to fire the harpoons into the whale. A charge of blasting powder attached to the harpoon then kills the whale, which is dragged back to the parent ship by a windlass.
