NOW AND THEN

CONTENT

When a minute falls as softly
As a muted fountain drop,
Till the last swift, fevered beating
Of the day's pulse slows to stop;

When there's moonlight at my window
Where the cedar shadows lean,
And there's quiet like a curtain
On my garden's growing green;

When there's naught I've left unfinished
With the morrow in my mind,
And the problems of my being
In my weariness, I wind;

When I know my home's about me,
And my children are in bed ,
Then if I could be whoever,
I would be myself instead!

SONIA RUTHELE NOVAK.

Sonia Novak, a musical name, like so many of Swedish names are. The country is full of music and musical talent.

CLOUDS

Were there no clouds there would not been the beautiful sunsets which we have.

In dry weather when the sun goes to rest in a perfectly clear sky we miss the brilliant colors that illumine the clouds as they enfoid the setting sun.

Byron has beautifully described the sunset to the dying dolphin which, they say changes its color again and again when wounded and in pain.

He describes it thus:

'Parting day dies like the dolphin
Which each pang embues
With a new color as it pants away;
The last still loveliest
'Tis gone and all is grey.'

Clouds are many kinds, the great white cumulus clouds that seem piled up in the sky, the cirrus, those delicate shell like ones that float about; and the stratus, which generally attend the setting sun.

Because clouds hide the sunshine we compare them to pain and sorrow.

Very often one speaks of them as having a silver lining, and one poet has written;

The inner side of every cloud,
Is bright and shining;
I, therefore turn my clouds about,
And always wear them inside out,
To show their lining.

He is an old man. Year by year the people who pass through the park see him sitting on a bench which seems to belong to him alone.

Some times when the policemen go by with their big stick, he quickly disappears, but as soon as the danger is past, he is back again, perhaps with a discarded newspaper, which he has picked up on his way back.

He is always at the soup houses at meal times, where one can get a plate of soup for a penny.

This summer the Welfare took up his case, thinking him a deserving case for help.

He was asked how long he had been but of employment, 'Well,' he said, 'I had my last place in 1884.' He had been out of employment 51 years.
