PRODUCE MORE

FOOD FOR FREEDOM

the CONSERVATION WAY

It has been determined that mixtures of grasses and legumes may produce two or three times as much hay or pasture as will grass alone.

As legumes and perennial grasses are the cheif pasture plants and a pasture sod should always contain a mixture of such plants, putting land into properly managed pasture is truly a soil building practice. In sharp contrast is the use of the soil for raw crops, such as field corn, sugar corn, tomatoes, or potatoes, as commonly grown on sloping land. Losses of soil under such crops average from 30 tons of soil from each acre annually and in extreme cases may run as high as 150 tons, which is equal to 1 inch of top soil, or about one-seventh of the average topsoil, the only fertile soil on most land. Such losses when repeated on the millions of acres that are in corn and other intertilled crops subject to erosion, result in enough soil lost to cover an eighty acre farm seven inches deep every hour.

When sloping land is kept in good pasture, the wastage of soil is stopped. Measured losses are frequently less than 100 pounds per acre annually and average only 700 pounds of soil per acre annually on 13 important soil types, under typical conditions in the eastern half of the United States, when a dense cover of grass is maintained. In addition, the soil under a pasture sod actually becomes more productive and requires a minimum of expenditure for mineral plant food. Most of the mineral matter in the forage consumed by grazing stock, is returned directly to the soil if they are kept on the pasture continuously. Furthermore, the decaying grass roots add humus to the soil, and the humus in turn converts the raw minerals in the soil into forms that can be used by plant roots. In addition, the growth of grass roots has a beneficial mechanical effect. Their taking up water from the soil particles causes larger and more stable soil granules to be formed. These granules improve the tilth of the soil. It becomes easier to work and allows water to soak in more rapidly. The water holding capacity is also improved by the increased granulation and greater humus content.

It pays to establish permanent pasture. If you follow the land use capability map, that is prepared for your farm, areas best suited for pasture can easily be picked out. Pasture on sloping or poorly drained land pays greater profit than intertilled crops.

Get in touch with your local Soil Conservation District Supervisors or County Agent for information on Land Use Capability and proper land use.

Maryland Musings

The Army needs unlimited quantities of feathers of all kinds. Dressing plants and slaughter houses are asked to save every feather possible. Duck and goose feathers are used principally for making sleeping bags for the Army. Chicken and turkey body feathers are used for bed pillows for the Army and Navy. Large quantities of chicken feathers are used for camouflage, with burlap and wire screening and on the sides of buildings. The particular shortage of feathers is for sleeping bags for our own armed forces.

Our armed forces get 13% of 1943 food; civilians, 75%; lend-lease allies 10½; friendly neighbors, 2%. Military needs are large because average service men eat 1½ times as much as civilians.

A survey of 252 farms in Maryland made in 1942 showed that 57 percent of the farmers' houses were in good condition and 23 percent of the tenant houses were in good condition; 58 percent of the tenant houses were in fair condition and 19 percent were in poor condition. About 44 percent of the farmers' dwellings and only 8 percent of the tenant houses had bathrooms.

The clothes moth may be guilty of destroying harmony in the home as well as wool and fur goods. Entomologists say that moths have put many a piano out of tune by eating the felt that supports the wire strings. One way to oust moths from the piano, they say, is to hang a muslin bag containing about 4 ounces of paradichlorobenzine inside the piano case and keep all cracks and openings sealed for a week so that the fumes will kill the moths.

TO OWNERS OF PROPERTY IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

The U. S. Treasury is seeking to ascertain as nearly as possible the total American stake all over the world. It believes with this information available that the government's hand will be strengthened on all war fronts, at the peace conferences and in the post-war world-wide economic readjustments.

Under the law, holders of foreign property are required to file reports of their holdings on Form TFR-500 by December 1, 1943.

If you have any foreign investments—dollar bonds, bank balances, real estate or other tangible property—and have not yet filed your report, we would be happy to assist you in obtaining the proper forms.
