Bells of Christmas

REV. E. LEON DAGE
Olivet Methodist Church
Galena, Maryland

Oh, Happy Bells of Christmas ringing out
In the crispy-bright Christmas-day Morn
The message, that of hope—a Saviour born;
Ring it out in the black, pitch-black, world so forlorn.

Oh, Bells, on this sad Christmas pleading out,
Not the chimes of a world lost in fear
But your sweet message, that of hope, of cheer,
May we heed thy dear plea for His coming this year.

Oh, Bells this war-torn Christmas peeling out
To hearts hid in gross sin and despair
Who hate, who shun, who fear our Father's care,
Peel ye out, Sacred Bells, in grand tones thy sweet prayer.

Ye Noble Bells of Christmas Morn, oh, shout
O'er the rock-ribbed cradle—the earth—
To those not knowing Him, our Saviour's worth;
Ring out hope, man's new hope in His glorious birth.

Oh, Peaceful Bells in Christmas singing out
To the hearts by the Saviour's great Grace
Reborn to serve the King and human race,
Sing ye Freedom's glad song, "He hath died in our place."

Oh, Healing Bells of Christmas fling ye out
With thy greatest might Christmas-day Morn,
Fling forth your balm—the King was born;
Ring, Glad Bells, there is hope for a world not forlorn.

HIGH SCHOOL

4A Girls Make Bandages

Every Thursday the 4A girls leave high school at 1 o'clock and go down to the Chestertown Bank where they make bandages. Through the generosity of the high school faculty these girls are excused from classes for two hours.

The equipment needed for this work is a clean garment to be put over the every day clothes and a handkercheif of some sort to entirely cover the hair.

Under the careful supervision of Mrs. Hugh Sease and Mrs. Frances Metcalfe the girls have done some great work. Right now they are making absorbing bandage which measure eight by ten inches when completed. The girls usually average around ninety bandages in two hours.

The girls who attend are: Betty Payne, Betty Kimble, Betty Pinder, Jean Dwyer, Jean Gill, Virginia Groves, Margaret Redman, Mary Quinn, Dorothea Roberts, Kitty Mulligan, Hazel Jones, Ann Coleman, Anne Burris and Christine Fogwell.

Maryland Mussing

With less farm labor and machinery available, War Food officials think more fertilizer offers one of the chief opportunities to boost food and feed production on the present acreage of crop land. In carrying out plans for an all-time record crop production next year, they promise farmers the help of the biggest supply of fertilizer in the Nation's history. Although total supplies are larger, the situation varies with the three main fertilizer materials—nitrogen, phosphorus and potash.

Economists of the USDA say it now seems certain that for the first year or two after the fighting stops farmers in this country will have to keep up production to meet the huge demand. They will have to grow peanuts, more peas, cabbage, potatoes, more wheat and other grains, and more milk, eggs, and lean pork; and as many meat animals as we can get the forage and grain to feed.

With less feed this winter and about 10 percent more stock to feed, farmers need to do more careful feeding than ever before.

No need to sigh over sour milk. Whether it is a cupful or a dab, milk or cream that turns sour is a leftover with a useful future.

Recent surveys by the Soil Conservation Service indicate that the Eastern Shore of Maryland alone is in need of draining 603,000 acres of land. It is estimated that this would require digging out 600 miles of silted streams and construction of tile and open ditches by farmers to tie into these many streams. The surveys show that approximately 50 percent increase in average yields are obtained from farms where outlet streams have been cleared and adequate lateral drains provided. The same survey brings out the fact that legume hay, a generally higher yielding hay, will grow where the land is drained when only redtop and timothy would grow before.

With the right quality of Pekin ducks and with proper management plus good feeding, it is possible to raise ducks averaging 7 pounds each at 10 weeks of age, according to the University of Maryland poultry department.

PRODUCE MORE
FOOD FOR FREEDOM
the CONSERVATION WAY

The Supervisors of the Kent and Queen Anne's Soil Conservation Districts want to impress upon the minds of the farmers and land owners of these two Eastern Shore Counties that trees are crops the same as corn wheat or hay.

The old idea that land, in whatever physical condition it may be, is still land and that it is safe to put time, labor, fertilizer and seed on it in the vane hope of receiving an economic return must be set aside for the saner thought that each piece of land has its productive limitations or capabilities.

At present, there are 176,000,000 acres in our National Forests; in Commercial forests are some 461,-697,000 acres; in non commercial forests 168,461,000 acres. Most of this non commercial forest land is on private farms in small enough units to receive individual farmer attention. It is this area that must now come forward and help supply the lumber for our Navy's ships, lifeboats, ship decks, masts, gunstocks, barracks and many of our civilian needs such as pencils, paper of all kinds and many other everyday necessities, especially fuel.

This can be done as illustrated by the following article appearing in the November 1943 issue of the Farm Journal. In part, this article says: "More to the point than a dozen bulletins on woodlot management is the actual experience of Henry Webster, Cayuga County, New York.

'On the Webster Farm, about 4 miles out of Aubum, is a woodlot of 15 acres, located on the top and slopes of a rocky ridge that has never been cleared for cropping. From this woodlot, Mr. Webster harvests storewood and fireplace wood which he sells to his customers in Aubum.

'What makes Mr. Webster's experience valuable to other woodlot owners is this: For ten years, he has kept records of labor (himself, his son, his team) and sales, so he knows just what the woodlot is worth.

'In ten years, Mr. Webster has sold 200 cords of wood from this woodlot. His gross income was 1955. He and his son worked 1355 hours felling and bucking, 376 hours hauling and 317 hours buzzing—a total of 2048 man hours. In addition, there was 376 team hours, and an outlay of $17.43 for gas and oil for buz sawing.

'From these figures you can get a good measure of the efficient use of time, team and equipment. . . . .

'In other words, the labor of Mr. Webster and his son brought in $1,777.17, which figures out 86 cents an hour. Their work was done in between other chores.

'The sale of 200 cords of wood in 10 years has not cleaned out the woodlot. The cut has been in excess of the annual growth because some large hickories died as a result of drought and had to be cut. Ten years ago, the stand averaged 38 cords per acre; not it averages 32. In the ten years ahead, Mr. Webster intends to build the stand up to 35 cords per acre.

'Chances are he will be able to do that, because he is doing a real job of woodlot management. Just as cultivated land is divided into fields, and rotated, so the Webster woodland is divided into three parts of about the same size—not by fences, but by daubing some yellow paint on the trunks of trees along interior boundaries. Each of these blocks is of a size that it will be ready for harvest once in three years."

With cordwood selling for from $15.00 to $20.00 a cord, one cannot neglect his woodlots, especially now with limited oil and coal supplies for domestic use in Kent and Queen Anne's Counties.

Remember, land is our basic resource. What we get off of every acre of our land is what counts. How well we take care of what we have now will depend our economic status in years to come.

Save by wise use and assure a place for those coming after us to live and work.
