Shrimp Cocktail A Very Tasty Salad

There are very few people who don't like a shrimp cocktail—but, since it is a cocktail we don't find it served to any great extent. Housewives just overlook the first course so often, except when serving soup. It therefore becomes a very fine idea to change the shrimp cocktail from a first course to the salad course—and a wonderful salad it makes—the cocktail sauce is every bit as good on the lettuce as it is on the shrimp.

SHRIMP COCKTAIL SALAD

Remove black veins from 2 cups of well-chilled cooked or canned shrimp Place shrimp on crisp chicory or lettuce leaves in individual serving dishes. Top with—

COCKTAIL SAUCE

½ cup catsup
3 tablespoons chili sauce
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon prepared horseradish
½ teaspoon Worcestershire

Combine ingredients. Chill. If a milder sauce or more generous servings are desired, blend these ingredients with ½ cup of mayonnaise.

Match Manufacturing

Although about 100 ingredients are used in the manufacture of matches and their heads and the wood for the splints must be cured for nearly two years, modern methods developed in the United States have reduced production costs so that despite higher cost of materials and labor the match still retails at the same prices as 35 years ago.

Select Quality Turkey

The best quality turkeys have a good full breast, well covered with flesh over thighs and backs, a good layer of fat under the skin, few bruises or other blemishes, and few pin feathers. A pliable breast bone shows that the bird is young and tender. Allow about a pound of weight for each person served. Hens are usually from 7 to 15 pounds and toms from 14 to 25 or more pounds. If you select a bird large enough to have some "leftovers" you will add variety and value to meals. Save every bit of broth and fat; turkey fat is a delicious cooking fat, valuable in wartime.
