South America's Johnny Appleseed

South America has a variation of the North American story of Johnny Appleseed, but in Paraguay it was oranges rather than apples that were planted. During the Paraguayan war, General Lopez commanded that oranges be planted on all estates. He also encouraged people, whenever they ate an orange anywhere in Paraguay, to plant the seed. In Brazil, large scale commercial production of oranges has developed, and to a lesser extent in Cuba, Mexico and Argentina.

Spotted Rugs

Try using a little art gum to remove sooty footprints on light colored rugs.

To save sugar and to give breakfast grapefruit a fine flavor, cut out the white centers of halved grapefruit the night before, and fill them with honey, or with the juice from maraschino cherries or other preserved fruits.

Farm labor will be the most critical problem facing farmers who plan for full scale food production in 1946.

A new potato variety named Menominee is quite resistant to scab and has proved to yield well in Garret Countly, Maryland. In Eastern Maryland, however, this potato does not compare well in yield with standard varieties now grown.

Eleven persons have enrolled in the University of Maryland short course for dairy herd improvement testers which will be completed December 15.
