To Clean Out Fowl Ticks

Carbolineum, a wood preservative sold under various trade names, will control fowl ticks. In treating a house, clean the roosts and surrounding woodwork. Then apply carbolineum, being careful to get it in all cracks and crevices. The chemical, which can be applied with a brush or a sprayer, will spray better and go farther if mixed with about equal parts of kerosene. Apply early in the morning to allow the material to dry in thoroughly before roosting time.

Cloudless Skies

When Australia starts developing its infant film industry and decides to build a counterpart of Hollywood, it won't be able to set it up in central Australia. The weather's too dry there for film-making. Clouds needed for essential pictorial effects in the cattle-droving epic, "The Overlanders" were so rare that on one occasion they had to race 60 miles across a tableland to catch up with a herd of cattle and photograph them while the thin, fleeting clouds were still around.

HERE THEY COME!! FIRST LOAD OF IMPORTED CZECHO SLOVAKIA HOPS FOR BALTIMORE

FLASH Gunther Brewing Company gets rare Czechoslovakian Hops in accordance with their policy of making beer only from the finest ingredients obtainable.

Baltimore, Maryland, January 10, 1946

When Gunther, throughout the war, kept reminding you: "When Peace brings better beer its name will still be Gunther's". . . they had already laid plans to get the first supplies of those world famous hops that grow only in the region of Pilsen.

True, they had to wait for the Nazi invaders to be driven out . . . and commerce re-established . . . but now the first of these great hops will once again help to enhance that dry, beery flavor that made Gunther's so famous.

Remember, before the war, Gunther's ranked with the World Famous Beers — was considered by the Master Barmen as second only to one world famous imported beer.

That was not an accident. Gunther simply purchased the costliest malt, grain and hops available anywhere in the world.

And that's what makes premium dry beer. Not words or claims. But malt and hops. Not just good malt and hops, but the fanciest, prize malt and hops.

FEW REAL PREMIUM BEERS!

Some people seem to think that what you pay for beer determines its quality. It's what the brewer pays for the ingredients that really produces a premium beer day in and day out.

That's why Gunther provided Government Authorities with affidavits as to the price and grade of the malt, grain and hops they purchased. The receipted bills were always there for anyone to see.

You see Gunther's large production and wonderful consumer demand saved them enough money so they could afford to use only the costliest, finest malts and hops available—at times more than double the average price of hops—to give Maryland folks the best glass of beer made in this country . . . at the cost of plain, everyday beers. Of course, when a bottle of Gunther's is sold out West...it has to sell for as much as certain St. Louis or Milwaukee beers sell for here.

PEOPLE KNOW

But most real beer lovers aren't fooled. They know good beer regardless of price. And Gunther's today — because of its remarkable quality under war conditions — has far, far greater demand here than any local or out-of-town beer or any two or three of them combined.

Of course, Gunther's will keep on improving its dry-beery character, now that the war is over. But it will be many moons before you taste the great glass of beer we promise you. The finest hops and malt are just beginning to be available. But you can't make great beer in a hurry. It has to age to its full, mellow, dry beer-i-ness . . . Just you wait and see.

Just as before the war Gunther's Premium Dry Lager was made only from world famous hops and the costliest grains, the brewers of Maryland's famous beer pledge to produce as fine a premium dry lager as it is possible to make . . . and to sell it, in this their home market, at the price of regular beers.
