TELLING THE WORLD

Evanston, Ill. . . . Mrs. Harold Green probably owes her life to the telephone in her home. She was overcome by gas fumes from a leaking pipe in the heating system recently, according to the Associated Press. Mrs. Green staggered to the telephone and called "Help" and then collapsed. Her parrot flew to the telephone and repeated the cry "Help." The operator heard the bird and notified the rescue squad, which revived Mrs. Green.

Washington, D. C. . . . Telephone service with El Salvador, Central America, was opened recently with an exchange of greetings between Secretary of State Cordell Hull at Washington and Dr. Miguel A. Araujo, minister of foreign relations for El Salvador, at San Salvador. All Bell and Bell connecting telephones are now available for this service. El Salvador is the most densely populated country in the Western Hemisphere, having about 1,670,000 people in an area of 13,000 square miles.

Manila . . . Teletypewriter service has recently been established between Manila and several Luzon centers by the Philippine Long Distance Telephone Company, according to Trade Commissioner J. Bartlett Richards.

Rio De Janeiro . . . Telephone development throughout Brazil has shown substantial increases during recent years with 150,081 telephones in service at the beginning of 1935, as compared with 114,325 on the same date in 1933, according to Assistant Trade Commissioner Aldene A. Barrington of the Bureau of U. S. Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

TELEPHONE RESEARCH ACTIVITIES REVIEWED

Radio "Skip" Control

Engineers of the Bell Telephone Laboratories have now developed a transmitter which may be used for telephone or for continuous wave or tone-telegraph transmission. With this transmitter, according to J. B. Bishop, radio development engineer of the laboratories, ten frequencies may be selected merely by dialing one digit on a telephone dial.

This apparatus has been developed for aviation and marine transportation where it is obviously impossible to use wires, which have proved so valuable to railroads and carriers operating on land. The requirements of radio contact in the air or at sea have lacked much of the dependability of land wire services, Mr. Bishop states, but this lack of satisfactory operation is due largely to atmospheric disturbances such as "skip distance" effects. Fortunately, he says, these qualities affecting radio transmission, while present to some degree on nearly all frequencies, do not affect all frequencies alike. In particular, Mr. Bishop calls attention to the distance of the "skip" and the amount of interfering atmospheric noise, which varies not only with time, but also with frequencies.

If a radio circuit were restricted to the use of a single frequency, according to Mr. Bishop, there would be frequent periods of time when the channel would not be commercially usable, because of noise or other interference, but with apparatus that will take advantage of one of several frequencies available with a transmitter such as has been developed, this objectionable feature may be overcome. Since some frequencies are freer from disturbances at one time and others at another, the choice of frequencies is merely a matter of time of day or season of the year.
