The Social Wanderer

Dear Roamer:

I might as well tell you right in the beginning, of social notes I am not going to write, first and foremost because there 'ain't none.' Personally, I think we are all enjoying this bit of laxness on our calendars, and all but the days when I must write to you, knowing you are expecting some choice bits, and the feeling of disappointing you, I love, the casual life of this mid-way season. It's been such fun in the afternoon to either have a good walk, a game of golf, one table of bridge, to chat with another over a bit of handiwork or the ever proverbial mending. Afternoons such as we've had, urge one to do a bit of calling, calls that you did not make this summer when it was too hot to get yourself dressed up and arouse your friend attired, perhaps, in scanty bits from her lethargy. How much kick we are getting in the evenings over the political talk between the men and now and then putting in a word or two, just to let them know we are present at least. Yes, it's all a let-down after the August pace, but how welcome. Not that i hope it will be continuous, everyone loves something to look forward to, but it is nice to catch up.

I've had a lot of fun studying people lately—have you ever tried it? Sit in a railway station sometime, and just let your imagination run wild. You can have the best time—some faces so eager, some so perfectly sure of themselves, some so wistful, you just attach any number of stories to their lives, wondering why and where they are going or coming. I happened in at a sale this week which lasted all day. It was crowded principally with those of the feminine sex. It was better than the depot. It proved so forcibly the shades of likes and dislikes we mortals possess. It has oft been said, 'It's a good thing we all don't like the same thing.' The sale proved and contradicted this many times as the hours of the day wore on. Some wanted vases, others chairs, others tables, others plates, some statues, and so on. One lady beaming with pride over her bargain, was gazed upon by another with the thought of such a monstrosity in her house would be overbearing, whereas the same self-satisfied madam with her purchase tucked under her arm so snugly, was seen by another, thinking, 'I can't imagine her buying that.' And so the likes and dislikes. But then sometimes it ran this way, as the auctioneer warbled in his audible gabble and the bidding ran along—there would be two or three very much of the same mind, and then eyebrows would be raised for a few moments. Most likely in the end Madam X was the winner of the coveted object, and resignation became stamped upon their faces till the next time. You know they say the eyebrows are a part of the face comparatively but little noticed, though in disclosing the real sentiments of the mind scarcely any other features of the face can come into competition. In vain the most prudent female imposes silence on her tongue; in vain she tries to compose her face and eyes; a single movement of the eyebrows instantly discloses what is passing in her soul. Oh well, it was all in a day's rambling. We all had a good time and the next day, caressed our purchases as if we had won the Sweepstakes.

Another time this week, I attended a marvelous organ recital at Washington College given by Mr. John H. Eltermann on the wondrous new Hammond Electric Organ. Of the program, I have written elsewhere in the paper, but even there I kept on with my pschometry. As I looked around, some were there, though music lovers, who knew naught about it, others who were acquainted and others who knew and understood the program pretty thoroughly.

Others I saw, who came perhaps with a friend. Yes, they liked organs all right, although the beauty and design of the program, was slightly unappreciated, but they sat through, at least in quietude. But to see the real joy in the faces, the absolute wrapt expression of the intelligent music lover as the stirring exultant notes of Rubenstein's Russian patrol peeled forth, to the peaceful soft strains of Tannhauser's Evening Star, this was a compensation for those who came as an evening's outing. It was all in a day's life, again, and so the pattern weaves on, likes and dislikes. I must stop right here and if you can stand a bit of poetry, here are a couple of lines I've always tried to remember:

Time to me this truth hath taught,
Tis a truth that's worth revealing:
More offend from want of thought
Than from any want of feeling.

Oft unknowingly the tongue
Touches on a chord so aching,
That a word or accent wrong
Pains the heart almost to breaking.
So to be, is far better than not to be

Yours,
THE WANDERER.

P. S. If you'll forgive all this, this week, I'll give a street carnival myself next week, and write about it if nothing else has taken place.

FIFTY-FIVE FOOT WHALE ON EXHIBITION TODAY

'Colossus' the 68-ton whale, Capt. David J. Barnett and the greatest collection ever assembled of both living and dead sea monsters makes the opening bow in Chestertown, at noon today, Saturday. Amid nautical surroundings that lent a salty tang to the very atmosphere, the gigantic marine exhibit will be spread over a specially built railroad car ovr 100 foot long, and will be placed on a siding near the Pennsylvania station. Old 'Colossus' himself took up the biggest chunk of this space, stretching 55 foot from his baloon filed jaws to the tip of his flukes.

Capt. Barnett, who has spent the last 50 years of his life in whaling in remote reaches of the Pacific, had a personal hand in the capture of Colossus 4 years ago off the California coast and since that time he has spread the fame of his embalmed prima donna from coast to coast, via print, the lecture platform and radio. A staff of 22 uniformed attendants will be on hand to give educational talks on each feature of the show and to answer any questions asked by landlubbers, from noon until 11 p. m. The whale is only one of the shows attractions. Also on exhibit will be the live Penguin family, those rare Arctic birds. Only a few specimens have been brought to this country and the Eueka whaling company is the first organisation ever to display publicity in a nation wide tour of these comical birds.

Other exhibits include live Chinese dragon lizards and other wonders of the sea and far off places. The exhibit will remain here for one day only and will be open to the public from noon until 11 p. m.
