THE SOCIAL WANDERER

Dear Roamer,

During a life time there comes to some the call to arms, the call of the sea, to others the call of the wild, the call of faith, and on this Hallowe'en, the Eve of All Saints, when the call of faith is nearer to us all, the call of merriment surrounds it. To-night, ghosts, witches, goblins, skeletons, owls and goblins will reign supreme. All the pranks from bobbing for apples, going down the cellar steps backward with a candle and mirror, to the weird street carnivals, will hold full sway. But the most eerie of all Hallowe'en pranks was played by Old Mother Nature herself a year ago to-night, when the fun was all over, and to our cots most of us had hied, we were rudely awakened by the shaking of our beds, the rattling of doors, the tinkle of china and to our dismay, on becoming wide awake, it was no nightmare, but the ghastly tremors of an earthquake. Do you remember? Yes, a year ago to-night.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Browne M. Roe entertained at a most attractive luncheon and bridge, at her home in Sudlersville. Hallowe'en favors and colors predominated and each detail was carried out with the greatest cleverness and originality.

Miss Groves, who is a Senior at Western Maryland College, was operated on last Friday and is the daughter of Mrs. Catherine Groves, near Kennedyville. Both Miss Baxter's and Miss Grove's operations were performed at the Kent and Queen Anne Hospital.

Little friends of Jackie Stenger assembled at his home last evening for refreshments prior to the Hollowe'en party held at Emmanuel Episcopal Church for the children.

Mrs. Emma Smith, of Chestertown, and Mr. William Lamb, of Kennedyville, were quietly married at the Methodiist Protestant parsonage by Rev. W. P. Roberts, on Wednesday evening.

Good-bye, now, October, and your briight blue skies, always running out on Hallowe'en, you must be afraid the goblins will get you! But the witches might catch me if I don't run,

So I'm
Yours on the path,
The Wanderer.

FIRE DAMAGES HOME NEAR GALENA

Immediate plans were sought by Mr. and Mrs. John C. Martin, Philadelphia publisher, for rebuilding a wing of their summer home near Galean, on the Sassafras River, damaged to an extent of $10,000 in a six-hour fire Sunday night.

Herman Van Horn, chief of the Townsend fire department, one of five companies fighting the blaze, and an unidentified farm boy were overcome.

A defect in the fireplace was thought responsible for the fire, which started on the second floor about 5 o'clock. The Middletown firemen fought the blaze for two hours before companies from Townsend and Odessa, Del., and Millington and Chesapeake City went to their assistance.

The flames were confined to four rooms and one wing of the house, although for a time it appeared the entire place, remodeled at a $25,000 cost this summer, might be destroyed. Fireman and farmers had begun removing valuable furnishings.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin said they would start rebuliding at once.
