NOW AND THEN

Autumn in her golden light stands with her palette in her hand while she paints every tree in sight all sort of lovely colors.

Notably among the lovely trees is the Maple that stands in Mrs. William Wilmer's yard. So gorgeous is it that it inspired a guset in town to write the following poem which the Transcript is glad to publish:

A MARYLAND MAPEL TREE

A glowing mass against a deep blue sky
A phantasy, a color symphony.
A living joy to every passer by
With beauty loving soul and eyes that see.
A hundred winter snows have wrapped it round,
A hundred April rains its buds caressed,
A century of summers men have found
Beneath its bows a grateful shade and rest.

The western wind with fluent rhythmic grace
On this October morn so sparkling, clear,
Whispers to me—"This is a holy place,"
Worship at beauty's shrine for God is here.
Reverent I stand beside the garden gate

Entranced, enthralled, and inarticulate.

EMILY D. STONEHILL.

As the writer went along this windy morning, a birds nest, that probably had been blown out of a tree, was n the pathway. Stopping to examine it, the finder was impressed with the skill of the builder. The inner walls of hest was made of mud but put together so deftly and sceurely with the hair and straw around the nest, could only have been done by a bird. How many little ones had feathered there? In spite of the poets saying "There are no birds in last years nest," it does seem that the new builders do repair the old homes of the year before.

Old St. Paul, of Manhattan, is celebrating its one hundred and seventeenth anniversary of the oldest public in New York City. The Church is preserved just as it was built in the long ago.

New York is a city subject to change. Before a building becomes old it is pulled down to make room a more modern one.

But there is no more delightful descriptions than in the History of Old New York, and if one wants to have a side splitting laugh let him read Knickerbocker's History of New Amsterdam, the original name for New York, written by Irving who tells of the days when the Dutch reigned supreme there, gathering in wealth and comfort. It was in the time of old Peter Stuyvesant, Governor of the Colony, that the English found that this prosperous province belonged to them by prior right of discovery and so the Duke of York sent his fleet over to take it from the Dutch. In vain the old Governor urged to old Burghers to resist, so at last he went down to the landing with his weapons to forbid the English to land, but they did so in spite of him and the name of the city was changed to New York.

And the Bowery, now the most populous part of the city as far as numbers are concerned, is built on what was then the Governor's farm.

But the old Dutch influence still survives. Those with the names of Van, Renselar, Roosevelt and Stuyvesent look back with pride upon their ancestry.

HODSON HALL

Nature smiled on the open air assembly of people who wathered in front of the new Hodson Hall to hear the exercises at the opening of the new dining hall and recreation rooms of hte Hodson Memorial.

The family of Colonel Hodson and his many friends were there to take part at the opening of this handsome colonial building.

The exercises took place in front of the Memorial Hall.

Dr. Mead was, as he always is, a most delightful chairman and the speeches of the Colonel's friends were most interesting.

The dining hall and recreation rooms are a much needed addition to the college.

The furnishings are of mahogony and the handsome curtains at the large windows add a finishing touch to hte building.

Like most college refectories, the walls are hung with portraits and silhouettes of men of prominence and those who have done much for the college.

FOR THOSE WHO REMAIN

When death visits a home, the first concern is to perform the last service to the loved one in a becoming manner. What ever is done must express all the reverance and affection that is felt at such a time. But in addition to this a further responsibility rests upon the funeral director. It is his privilege and duty to lessen as far as lies with in his power, the burdens laid upon those who remain. By countless little acts of thoughtfulness he can make the way easier for them.

We consider this part of our work as important as any other. Our highest aim is to have our patrons look upon us as trusted friends, ready and anxious to render sympathetic assistance to those who remain behind.

Funeral Director.

Going to Try It?

The dear old soul watched the gayly clad cowboy dexterously swinging his lasso in the grounds of the circus.

"What a long rope," she said at last. "What do you use it for?"

"Waal, lady," he replied, "when I'm out west on the ranch I use it for catching cows."

"Catching cows?" she echoed. "How very interesting. Tell me, what bait do you use?"—Answers Magazine.

The thing that isn't odd is the fact that W B F R was one of the first stations to bring you this appealing type of program. Remember, for the unusual in radio broadcasting----
