NOW AND THEN

ODE

How sleep the brave, who sink to rest
By all their country's wishes blest!
When Spring with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallowed mould,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod.
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.
By fairy hands thier knell is rung,
By forms unseen their dirge is sung:
There Honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
And Freedom shall awhile repair
To dwell a weeping hermit there.
William Collins—1746

Last Wednesday was Armistice day—What a wonderful day it was eighteen years ago. How every heart was filled with joy, after weary days of weeping and praying that the war should cease.

Then, like the Jews of old when the Lord turned the captivity of Zion," our mouth was filled with laughter and our tongue with singing." And then the boys came home, though many were left in France with poppies growing over their graves.

Some came back well and strong, but never with the same joyousness that was theirs before the horrors of war; and many came back, blind, and many wounded.

War is surely a waste, not only in loss of property and material but in human lives.

THE COUNTRY STORE

This was quite a success both socially and financially. Of course as it was for the hospital everybody is glad. Such lovely things as were displayed! Such fancy work! such paintings! It really made one glad to belong to Kent and Queen Anne's County.

The bicycle parade was a reminder of old times even Oscar Wilde came to be in it. The sweet old costumes wre reminiscent of past days and it showed plainly that the belles of the past were just as charming and pretty as the belles of the present day.

The children, as always, added a pleasing picture to the affair. The whole entertainment showed how much real work was done and the thanks of the community are due to Mrs. J. K. Maxwell, Mrs. Humpheys and their able co-workers.

Roosevelt is re-elected, It is a great triumph so the people say. It is a victory, but the cares of Government have certainly taken their toll. Compare his present picture with the one taken four years ago. Many lines are added to his face, his hair has grown thin and gray.

Leadership is a wearing thing. "Noblesse oblige" is certainly true; that the responsibility of greatness is very exacting. Landon in his home without the responsibility of leadership will have much the easier life.

One Kato, a Japanese subject has a beard five and a half feet long. As Kato is a little man only five feet, one inch, he has to carry the end of his beard in a hand bag, to keep from tripping over it. His nation is quite proud of him. It is a good thing that he does not live in Russia for Stalin, the great autocrat, gives notice that those who do not cut off their beards will have their heads cut off. As the Russian hero, Peter the Great in the old time commanded that all should were them, it is a terrible wrench for the peasants to give up them up and many, it is said are saving their lopped off beards to be put in the coffin with them when they die.

"Gone with the Wind," Margaret Mitchels story of the South is one of the most popular books at the present time. Every where one sees the big book in somebody's hand. It is hardly one that one can lay aside.

MAUD MULLER

The poet Whittier tells of her in his matchless way.

She was raking the hay on this summer day, singing so sweetly that the mocking bird echoed her song. The sun shone through her torn hat and kissed the sweet beauty of her face.

As she looked towards the town a wish that she might have better things filled her breast.

The Judge rich and learned came riding by. He drew his bridle and asked her for a drink from the spring. She stopped where the spring bubbled up and filled her small tin cup, and as she gave it to him she blushed to think of her feet so bare and her tattered gown.

But the Judge lingered and as he talked she forgot her dress and her feet so bare and listened with pleased surprise.

And then having no excuse he rode away.

Ah me! sighed the maiden if I could be the Judge's bride how happy I would be.

My father would have a fine coat and my brother should have the boat he wants. I would feed the hungry and my mother would wear silk and the baby should have a new toy every day.

The Judge looked back as he climbed the hill and saw the maiden standing there.

Aform more fair and a face so sweet, her modest answer and graceful air, shows that she is as wise and good as she is fair he thought.

Oh if she were mine and I like her was harvesting the hay he sighed. But he thought of his mother and sisters proud and cold and vain of their rank, and so he closed his heart to the thought, and he married a woman of richest dower, but often as he watched the fire's bright glow he would think of the brown eyed maiden and wish that he were free again.

She married a man unlearned and poor, and she had many children, but often in her fancy's wandering she remembered the day when the Judge stopped to asked for a drink. And then her narrow kitchen walls would stretch out into stately halls and a manly form would be beside her. Then she would take up the burden of life again, saying only. "It might have been."

There is a report that Miss Frances Perkins will resign her position as Secretary of Labor. It must be a strenuous task for a woman.

Hitler, the great in Germany forbids the restaurants to use French names on the mnu, only German ones which makes quite a mouthful before the diner partakes of the fare.

He insists, too, in having scientific names in German too. So the name of Einstein's theory of relativety has such an impossible name, that it is harder to pronounce than relativity is to understand.

Men Wore Gloves First

In France men wore leather gloves long before women. In Louis XIV's time ladies first set off the beauty of their hands and arms with kid gloves or long knitted-silk mittens.
