Fighting Cattle of South France

The fighting cattle of South France bear a strong resemblance to the extinct aurochs. Their home is in the Rhone delta and particularly the Island of Camargue, situated between the two principal branches of the Rhone. These cattle are relatively small, but speedy and active. They are used principally for bloodless bull fights, which are held in all cities and villages of Provence. In color they generally are black and in winter they have long coats of hair. They have well-formed horns bending first to the side and then straight forward, similar to all ancient pictures of the aurochs. These cattle are bred to preserve their primitive wildness and have few, if any, of the traits of domestic cattle.

Name "Hurricane" Traced

A god of the Carib Indians, "Hurricane," is responsible for the name most frequently applied to tropical storms. Born in the belt of calm air over the Atlantic ocean just north of the equator, hurricanes are greatly affected by the earth's rotation. Winds, which otherwise would blow directly toward the rainstorm center, are deflected to the right, and rotating winds begin to move at speeds from 50 to 120 miles an hour.

Johnson Faultless in Dress

Andrew Johnson, while occupying the White House, was faultless in his dress, and particular to the point of fastidiousness. He always wore a frock coat and high standing collar, well fitting shoes or boots and carefully cut trousers. His biographers say that he was among "the most perfect types of American manhood; that he was of perfect mold and splendid physique."

Tung Oil From Nut

Tung oil, or chinawood oil is a thick oil, rather unpleasant in both smell and physiological action. As its name suggests, it is pressed from the nut of a tree that has been cultivated in China for 2,000 years. Tung oil dries at about the same rate as linseed oil to form a tough and highly resistant film. It long has been the basis of the celebrated Chinese lacquers.

Red Aurora Explained

Sunlight causes indirectly a redness of the aurora or northern lights, Dr. L. Vegard of the University of Oslo told the physicists as the result of new experiments. Prominent red lines in the auroral spectrum are enhanced when the atmosphere producing the aurora is sunlit. One type of red aurora is explained by the presence of ozone, the concentration of which is greatest on the day-side of the earth.

"Rope-Flying" an Old Sport

In the 1730s in England daredevils enjoyed a sport called "rope-flying" in which, lying on a grooved platform, they slid down a double rope stretched between a church steeple and a distant fence. But it was prohibited after the day when someone playfully tied a donkey to one of the platforms and sent the animal headlong into a group of spectators from the spire of All Saints' church in Derby.—Collier's Weekly.

A radically new principle in watch construction is used in the Gruen CURVEX. Its handsome case is curved to fit your wrist, but more important, its 17 jewel Precision movement is actually curved to fit the case. This permits of full size, sturdy working parts . . . makes possible a sleek, wrist-form watch of uncanny accuracy. The CURVEX principle is exclusively Gruen.

To be sure of obtaining the genuine CURVEX, look for the name "GRUEN" on the dial.
