NOW AND THEN

O TO READ EACH OTHER BETTER!
By ALICE MATHEWS

What a lessoning of follies in this life could truly be,
If loyal and devoted, just the best, we all would see,
In each one whom we encountered, what happiness were showing
If the blooms of pessimism never, never we were growing.

By our soundness or unsoundness, in our daily round of cares
In relation to the trails of our personal affairs:
If we'd gain more understanding of the other fellows heart
Why the woe we're overrating might right speedily depart.

Take gay youth in all its glory, if it only better read
What the older people yearned for, no unkind words might be said:
But in all the hurry, scurry of the life of this today
Misinterpret we, too often, what our neighbors have to say.

So lets seek for understanding, in its highest, purest role
And let's try to be commanding in our very unmost soul
Love for others broad and patient, charity's efficient grace
And with truth let's greet each other always with a smiling face.

I, Patience and her two brothers have become quite famous children since the publishing of their book.

Miss Gilman, writing in the Sun Magazine tells an interesting experience with them. She was expelled from Germany, but had to wait a week before her ship would sail. "O never mind," said a friend, "Mrs. Abbe will take you in, though I can not promise you a quiet time."

When calling Mrs. Abbe up she was told that, as Mr. Abbe was away, she might have his bed. On her arrival there she found them living in a large studio room with two couches, one each for Mr. and Mrs. Abbe, and three bunks against the wall, one placed above the other as they are in sleeping cars. There were only four chairs there and a small table made up the furniture of the room.

They had almost no money but that did not disturb them. Mrs. Abbe proposed a party for her boarder. "But you have only four chairs." "Oh, that makes no difference, they will bring their chairs," and so, they did each guest bringing his chair with him.

Freedom from care ad responsibility they had often having very scanty meals, but not seeming to care.

Then they sailed to America and the children's book was published. It had a great sale and the family has been lifted above their accustomed poverty.

Now the children are in the movies, but Patience says, "We cannot stay here long for we will have to go all the way around the world."

Bees are very little objects but they yield a mighty influence on the human beings and upon the brute creation. Just start a hive of them on a balky horse and see the effect that it has. This Christmas they worked quite a tragedy on an ambitions merchant in South Africa. He was having a fine sale of goods when suddenly the bees which were storing their honey in the walls of the building, began to fly in the shop. The building was emptied in a few seconds, merchant and clerks joining the customers in their flight.

How the shop was cleared of the bees, the proper did not say, but surely it worked havoc with the Christmas trade.

"These who have been reading "Gone with the Wind" can realize what a tragedy the Civil War wrought on the south."

This is a true incident; a well to do family of North Carolina was warned that the Yankees were on their way to their neighborhood. There was nothing for the women to do, unprotected as they were as all the men were in the war, but to leave their home.

One of them took the silver and jewelry, put it in a box and buried it in the garden before they fled.

The enemy came on apace, and soon the house was stripped of its belonging. A turkey gobler was quietly feeding in the yard when the soldiers began to chase it. Unfortunately it ran over the buried treasure, and the enemy, seeing that the ground had been newly disturbed, dug the box up. It was quite a find!

One of the soldiers who was on a horse took a handsome breast pin and pinned it on the brim of his hat. On his way out he came in contact with a bee hive, the horseman was quickly unhorsed and as he fled from the bees swarm, he left his hat behind. When the family returned to their ruined home, they found the hat with the breast pin sticking in it.

Last week's news, told us of a royal wedding across the water Princess Juliana of Holland was married to Prince Berhard of Germany. There was no great display at this wedding, but Queen Wilhemina had to pay the expenses of the bridesmaids that were from Germany as Hitler has passed a law that no money should be carried out of that country.

Holland is an interesting land. In spite of her small area, she owns the four large islands of Borneo, Celebes, Java and Samatra in the East Indies, where coffee, spices and tropical fruits are grown in abundance. So rich are these islands that they are often called the Emerald of Queen Wilhemina's crown.

Holland is a most interesting country, most of it has been reclaimed from the North Sea, and because of this the Sea tries to get it back, hence the Hollanders have to build huge dykes to protect it when the tides are high.

There this little country stands undisturbed by war, when most of the countries around were engaged in war.

It is also the asylum of the former Kaiser, who stays at his estate at Doorn, cutting wood for exercise, and spending much time in his rosarium, cultivating his roses.

The Garden Club seems to have a busy year before it. Tending to the Plants planted in the fall in the Square, urging the planting of trees by the different organizations; chrysantheums shows, tours of gardens, and ornamenting the grounds around the Post Office.
