THE PUBLIC IS generally appreciative of the fact that Chestertown has a volunteer fire company which affords a great deal of security to those who own property, but when that company renders a direct service at time of fire the unselfish efficient work of that organization is exemplified. When firemen arrived at our printing establishment Tuesday morning the smoke and heat made it impossible to enter the building in an upright position. The natural tendency of untrained men would have been to shoot water into the smoke-filled room which in this particular case would not have reached the fire. Instead the firemen crawled into the building with their noses close to the floor dragging the hose line back of them until they rounded an ell in the building and saw the flame. Then and not until then did they use water and make quick work of extinguishing the fire. If water had been squirted haphazardly into the smoked filled building the result would have been very serious to a battery of printing presses which were some distance from the fire. It is true that the procedure of excitingly throwing water all over a smoked filled room, without any thought of water damage is easier, more fun and less hazarderous to the firemen but when volunteers consider the welfare of others rather than their own personal comfort it is something that the people of Chestertown can well appreciate. We also realize that these men had either already or were preparing to start the day's work in their respective trades or professions when the fire alarm sounded and shortly after the fire was extinguished went about their daily avocations as though nothing had happened. We have always lauded their organziation and now more than ever realize that public funds spent for fire any type of fire fighting equipment is repaid to this community many times.

Cockroach Eggs in Capsules

The eggs of cockroaches are developed in a small capsule which is deposited by the female in a moist warm place. Frequently the egg capsule may be seen protruding from the end of the abdomen of the female. The young hatching from these eggs resemble the adults in appearance, but are smaller and lack wings. They shed their skins several times while growing. Cockroaches emit a peculiar odor, which is sometimes imparted to food over which they walk, and often dishes also will reveal their presence.

Pyramids and Prophecy

There are no inscriptions in Cheops' tomb or pyramid, but many writers claim there is a geometric symbolism in its various measurements and that it was built to reveal certain truths to the world. For example, D. Davidson in an article states it was designed to be an astronomical time-chart, with a message concerning the destiny of the British race.

A large amount of water used when cooking cabbage or onions will insure a more delicate flavor.

Gasoline kills moth in sweepers and vacuum cleaners.

Mustard and baking powder settle in the can and should be stirred gently before measuring.

Meat and fish are best if removed from the paper before being stored.

Left over soft boiled eggs, can be reboiled until hard and used as a garnish for salads.

Powdered brown sugar is now being manufactured commercially.

A little olive oil in the water in which chamois is laundered will help in keeping it soft and flexible.

If a woman finds that her children are eating too many sweets, yet dislikes to deprive them of candy, she can well give it to them for dessert.
