HI SPOTS FROM THE HI SCHOOL

A vacation comes—it goes—and 325 students of Chestertown High School again return to their last period of uninterupted work untill the summer "let-out begins. This year the Easter holiday included Thursday, Good Friday, the week-end, and Easter Monday, giving the local pupils a few days sojourn from their school work. As I stated last week, April is full of events and we are well into the swing of them already.

After many unexpected postponements for the date of the Senior Class Play, "The Charm School," the final date of April 23rd has been set by hte managing committee that is headed by Miss Marie D. Bryan, also faculty advisor of the production. Tickets are being handled by the high school pupils and may be reserved at Stams at any time now. The curtain for this year's annual presentation will rise in William Smith Hall about 8.15 on that Friday.

I dropped in on the current rehersals that have been in progress and the cast seems promising indeed. With seventeen aspiring thespians in the roles, however, Miss Bryan's hands are "brimming full" with work in order to co-ordinate all three acts into a smooth running play. Incidently, this is the first year that a cast of such mmebers has been assembled to present such a full length comedy.

Social event of the week? Yes indeed, you've guessed it! The Senior Cotillion took place last Friday night, April second, at the Chester River Yacht and Country Club. Rippling rhythmns were provided by Bill Miller's "Rhythmnmaniacs", and "swing" apparently reigned high during the evening. Refreshments were served during the course of the evening in the attractively decorated clubhouse. Chaperones included the majority of the faculty and many mothers and fathers of members of the Senior Class.

Prior to the "tripping of the light fantastic" were two parties of social prominance—a dessert party given by Miss Margaret Anne Turner at her home on Washington Avenue, and a dinner party given by Miss Betty Beck.

We look with admiring glances toward Howard Strong, Jr., and his continued success with his recently completed "Queen Mary" that is competing for national honors for amateur boat model builders. From the contest sponsors, Juney learns that the photobraph shows a promising model and that they would like to have the miniature liner sent in for closer inspection. We're certainly proud, and ready to boast, too, when we find so capable a craftsman right in our midst.

On March 31, Mr. W. J. Stenger and Dr. F. G. Livingood, Washington College Professor, attended a hearing in the House of Representatives at Washington on the bill which provides for Federal aid to states for public institutions.

Completely completed is the new 1937 DRAGON that went to press last Wednesday, the twenty-fifth of March. All written work, both candid and portraits, have been completed; and all that remains is for the yearbook to come out ready to be distributed. Hitting a new high in sales this year, more Dragons have been sold than ever before, even tho the price was advanced slightly. The cover, for the first time in the history of the publications sponsored by the Seniors, will be solid imitation leather of a bright blue color and with silver printing, the original class colors selected.

Going to press this week is another issue of the Reflector, with its staff again busy at work. It is of interest to note the activities of the editor, Miss Charlotte Russell. She is not only preparing and directing the April issue but is appearing in the Senior Class Play. Coupled with this, Miss Russell just appeared in one of the one-act plays just given at the college. And so you, my readers see that between two rehearsals a day and a managing paper job, one Senior is definitely head over heels in work. Which all brings us to the point that, even with such active participation, Charlotte always and dependably does a thorough jub in all her undertakings. More laurels to her.

At the last meeting of the Senior Class, their colors and mooto and flower were chosen. With the graduation theme being carried out in marono and blue, the June week should be colorful. The red rose represents the 1937 class that chose for their motto, "Character is the connerstone of success."

Candid glimpses around find: the latest style of belts in the form of dog collars, fastened together, and brightly shined—a novel contest that is to be announced next week in the REFLECTOR—Milton Dorf as a "try-out" associate editor for the monthly paper—the smoothest of evening dresses being worn by the feminine dancers at the Senior Cottillion—the interesting movies that were shown to the boys on Thursday, April 1, by the International Harvester Company, and baseball on the athletic field, proving definitely that Spring is here! (Oh, haven't we heard that expression used before?)
