GLIMPES FROM SHORE COUNTIES

While the Christmas holidays for the general public are over there are a number of families in lower Delaware and on the Eastern Shore of Maryland who looked forward to their celebration of the holidays on Thursday, January 6th, which they known as "Old Christmas" and which they hold as sacred as December 25th.

Those holding to this belief base their support on the grounds that when Gregory changed the Caesar calendar it set back, by 13 days, the Yuletide season.

The 1935 farm census, just published by the Department of Commerce, shows the truck-growing Delmarva peninsula still ranks high as the nation's market basket, as it did when the previous census was taken in 1929 despite the fact that in recent years the tendency has been toward an even broader diversification of crops. Ten of the peninsula counties marketed tomatoes from one-tenth of the nation's total acreage planted in that crop, which for the country as a whole was increased about thirty per cent in the year of the census. This development in acreage "is in line with new health studies stressing the value of vitamins, of which the tomato is a principal source," the census bureau commented.

Central Delaware witnessed a rally of fox hunters last week in an effort to be permitted to continue their sport, along the lines of their usual customs, without interference from the State Game and Fish Commission. At this writing it would appear that the fox hunters have gained their point.

It all came about through what appeared to be a harmless family fox hunt on Christmas Day but while the trouble only affected one family, it quickly spread to a legion of fox hunters throughout the central section of the State.

On Christmas morning Earl Ivins, who resides near Denton, paid his usual visit to his father, who resides on the Delaware side of the State line. The father suggested that Earl return to his home for his fox hounds and then they would visit another son who resided between Burrsville and Harrington.

Earl did as directed and later in the day two sons put their hounds together and started to chase a fox with their father as the chief spectator to the hunt. Things proceeded nicely and all were enjoying themsleves until two Delaware game wardens appeared and arrested Earl for hunting in Delaware without a license.

The Magistrate agreed to postpone the trial until Tuesday evening and then things started. Fox hunter after fox hunter was called on the phone and told about the incident. Soon the telephones of State officials began to ring with protests.

Finally a member of the Game and Fish Commission was collared in an office in Dover where several fox hunters told them plainly that the Delaware fox hunters had been in the habit of inviting Maryland owners of hounds to come into this State for a social hunt and that Delaware dogs have been taken into Maryland for the same purpose.

Then, also, they quickly pointed out that frequently in a fox hunt, in the western section of the State, a fox and the dogs following him, will cross over into Maryland, so the fox hunters want to know what will happen if trouble is stirred between the two States over fox hunting since the hunter contend neither the fox nor the dogs are respecters of State lines.

A conference was then held between officials of the game commission and the trial of Earl Ivins was ordered postponed until January fifth and many believe it will receive another postponement when that date arrives.

An investigation reveals that the State game laws require a license for fox huntings and as far as could be learned the Delaware fox hunters all have a State license but they insist that they still have a right to invite their Maryland friends to come into Delaware to enjoy the sport.

An observer quietly noted, that, as usual, when fox hunters gather, many of the discussions on the matter started on the reasons why Ivins should not have been arrested but wound up on a discussion on the merits of this or that dog in a race.

Harford County experienced on Monday what is probably the minimum record in tax sales ever made here, at least for a number of years. When 10 o'clock A. M. Monday of this week, the annual date for the sale of delinquent taxpayers' property, arrived, Treasurer Edmund Snodgrass found that he had only ten properties to dispose of, which were quickly sold.

Believed to be the oldest living person in the State, Betsy Ann Stanley, Negress, marked her 111th birthday Saturday—Christmas Day at the home of a daughter near Williamsburg, on the Eastern Shore between Hurlock and Seaford, Delaware.

Betsy Ann has been married twice and is the mother of eleven children, only three of whom are living.

Dover is in grave danger of losing its baseball team in the Eastern Shore League. This situation came to light this week when John M. Ogden, general manager of the Baltimore Orioles, owners of the Dover franchise, let it be known that he had several enticing offers for moving the franchise.
