

SUGGESTIONS FOR PRESERVATION OF DRAPS IN THE HOME

Treatment Saves Draperies From Destruction By Gas

Have you wondered what made your window curtains and other draperies wear out so fast? Perhaps most of us have never considered the possibility that the draperies have been affected by absorption of gases from the air in the house. Sulphur in gases from coal-burning stoves and furnaces, and in illuminating gas, is destructive to all kinds of fabrics. Even when the familiar sulphur or coal gas smell is not present, there may be some sulphur fumes which combine with moisture to make strong acids. These are often more destructive than the normal wear on curtains, rugs, and draperies.

There is a simple way to protect your household textiles from the gases and at the same time make them more fire resisting, according to Miss Florence H. Mason, specialist in home furnishing and district agent for the University of Maryland Extension Service. The treatment does not affect the appearance of most fabrics. You simply dip the fabrics in a solution made of 7 ounces of borax and 2 ounces of boric acid dissolved in 2 quarts of water. In treating water-resistant fabrics enough soap is added to the solution to form suds. Laundered articles have usually lost their sizing, so soap is not needed.

There are other good fire-resisting and gas-proofing formulas, but every one is familiar with borax and boric acid and every drug store sells them to a small sum, so that it is not difficult to make the solution at home. This borate treatment does not furnish protection against sunlight, but treated curtains suffer no more than untreated ones. Articles laundered or exposed to the weather must have the fire-resisting dip after each laundering or wetting.

those who remain

When death visits a home, the first concern is to perform the last service to the loved one in a becoming manner. What ever is done must express all the reverence and affection that is felt at such a time. But in addition to this a further responsibility rests upon the funeral director. It is his privilege and duty to lessen as far as lies with him in his power, the burdens laid upon those who remain. By countless little acts of thoughtfulness he can make the way easier for them.

We consider this part of our work as important as any other. Our highest aim is to have our patrons look upon us as trusted friends, ready and anxious to render sympathetic assistance to those who remain behind.

Funeral Director.
