

NOW AND THEN

KATHLEEN
By Clyde Robe Meredith
Och! the glint in your beautiful eyes, Kathleen.

'Twas a dear little church 'neath the hill, Kathleen;
An' we sang in that rustic choir—
Och! the glorious days o' our youth, Maureen;

Many years have passed over our heads, Kathleen;
An' that church an' its choir are no more.

But there still is that glint in your eyes, Kathleen;
An' that gay, trillin' lilt in your voice.

There are so many poems, lovely poems that are so tinged with sadness that it is very heartening in these days to read this bright Irish one.

War! Grim War! There was never such a waste, waste of time, waste of material and sadder still the waste of human lives.

A TOLERANT MAN

There was never a more tolerant man than the late President McKinley. His wife, a charming woman when he married her, became an invalid, but in spite of her affliction she always insisted upon going with him on all occasions.

One night he was speaking on the tariff in Pittsburgh, when he was constantly interrupted by loud remarks from a rough, ill-mannered man in the gallery.

That ended the disturbance and won the audience completely. All through the evening McKinley addressed his remarks to the man in the gallery, and was not annoyed by another interruption.

MADE IT UNANIMOUS

The famed Edmund Burke, English Parliamentarian, paused in the middle of speech while delivering a fiery tirade against his contemporary Warren Hastings.

After a silence that lasted for fully a minute, he continued his address, much to the puzzlement of his colleagues.

When the oratory was over, one of his worthy debating opponents approached Burke deferentially. "Mr. Burke," he said, "that was one of the most effective pauses I have ever witnessed. We simply held our breaths, wondering what you were going to say next."
