MAKER OF POTTERY NOW 80 YEARS OF AGE

An industry of the manufacture of pottery is located just over the line in the state of Maryland, within a half mile of Rock Springs.

The proprietor is Henry Schofield, who is now in his 81st year. His wife is four years his senior. Mr. Schofield learned the pottery making with his father whose home was at Oxford. For the past sixty years this genial man has resided at his present home. When his business was at its height he burned four and five ovens of his product a year. Naturally his age will not permit him to be so active and he works just as the spirit moves him. He has a number of pieces of pottery, flower pots, small bird houses and other things completed, all shaped by hand, but it takes a large quantity to fill the oven, so it will be some time before he will have them baked and some of them glazed. He has a ready demand for his products.

Mr. Schofield is an interesting conversationalist and fully enjoys life. —Sun, Quarryville, Pa.

FOOD PROCESSING UNITS

The Department of Agriculture has announced the schedule of the remaining regional meetings at which plans are being made for a national community food preparation program. The program, which is being conducted by the REA, in cooperation with other Federal agencies and with local agencies, would set up food processing units in 2,300 counties of 46 States.

Under the program, REA will assist rural schools and other community centers served by REA-financed electric lines to install electrical equipment for processing and preserving health-protective and health-building foods.

The equipment, which will vary in type with community needs, is expected to serve a three-fold purpose. It will be available for the preparation of hot school lunches; for Extension Service workers, Farm Security supervisors and other educators to use in teaching adult groups scientific nutritional practices; and for members of the communities to use in preparing their grains, vegetables, fruits, meats and cereals for home consumption. In a well-equipped center there will be a hot plate and refrigerator to serve the school lunch program.

REA has authorized the more than 800 local REA electric systems throughout the country to make financing loans to the schools for the equipment, and several leading appliance manufacturers have agreed to give free installation service as a National Defense contribution.

DEFENSE TRAINING COURSES

A total of 17 courses, an increase of nine over last year, will be offered this fall under the University of Maryland College of Engineering's defense training program, Dean S. S. Steinberg announced today.

The University's program is designed particularly to meet the immediate employment needs of the aircraft and radio industries and to furnish training for men in the service, Dean Steinberg said. Last year, he reported, the University provided defense training for 2,000 men.

The courses will start this month as soon as the classes are filled. Instruction will be given by members of the faculty of the college of engineering and by specialists from industries. Classes will be held mostly at night in College Park, Washington, D. C., Baltimore and Hagerstown.

No tuition will be charged for the courses, but all applicants must be high school graduates, Dean Steinberg said. Additional information may be obtained by writing him at his office, University of Maryland, College Park.

Among the new courses to be offered this year is one on principles of radio, which is limited to men in the military service. Other new courses are:

Aircraft design, aircraft materials and inspection, chemistry of explosives, topographic drafting, fundamentals of electricity, principles of electronics, fire protection engineering; and preparation of engineering reports.

Courses offered last year, which will be repeated, include: aeronautical drafting, aeronautical drafting and design, aircraft inspection, aircraft tool engineering, engineering drawing, radio testing and inspection, radio engineering, and metallurgy and testing.

SUBJECT TO FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

By W. Lee Elgin, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles

Persons convicted of Operating under the Influence of Liquor, Failing to Stop, or Identify himself, after an Accident, and any Motor Vehicle Violation in connection with a fatal accident, do not know that they are automatically subject to the Financial Responsibility Act, and a revocation of their license. They contend had they known, they would have appealed the Magistrate's decision. Others who forfeited the collateral, rather than return for trial, would have stood trial, but were under the impression that paying the fine was the end of the matter, and in some cases were told so. In serious cases, it is only fair that motorists be advised of the consequences of such convictions. This Department receives numerous complaints after convictions on Failing to Stop, or Identify, after an accident. Many of these cases are merely technical, and the defendants do not realize the seriousness or consequences until they hear from this office, which is then too late to file an appeal. In a number of cases, a fender has been slightly scratched, or dented, and both drivers, thinking little or no damage has been done, drive on. Later, one will find he has a scratch or dent, and will swear out a warrant for the other's arrest--and on a Technicality, he is found guilty. Sometimes, both drivers stop, engage in an argument, and then drive off without either giving his name or address. Later on, one or the other becomes incensed and swears out a warrant for the other's arrest, charging him with Failing to identify himself. In both of the above instances, one is as guilty as the other, and if the person charged with such an offense, would in like manner, charge the other, I dare say both would drop the charges--or be dismissed by the Judge.

Often, a driver has left the scene of the accident, after duly stopping, in an effort to find or telephone an officer, and upon returning find that everyone has left the scene, but later on a warrant is served him for Failing to identify himself.

A charge of this type, even though on a technicality, puts the driver in the same class as the man who would injure a person and deliberately leave him lying in the highway without assistance. The record against him in this office is the same, and the consequences are the same, namely, a revocation of his license, and being subject to the Financial Responsibility Act, which requires him to file a certificate of compulsory insurance with this Department for a period of three years, even though he does not apply for re instatement for five or ten years hence.

To identify one's self means to give name, address and driver's license number. Of course, a good way to do this is to show your driver's license, which gives all the information necessary under the law.

However, I remember a charge being made because a man refused to actually show his license to the other driver, although he had it in his hand and held it up, and had given his name and address, but in his excitement, did not give him the number of the Opreator's card. Yet, this man was charged with Failing to identify himself, which he could not understand. However, any Police Officer can demand to see the license.

SUSQUEHANNA BRIDGE TOLLS

Despite two reductions in rates since it was opened August 28, 1940, the Susquehanna River Bridge has yielded the State a net profit of $286,000 for its first year's operation, it is reported by William A. Codd, Chief Auditor for the State Roads Commission. Gross receipts for the year were $730,621.03.

During the 12-month period, 3,505,675 vehicles crossed over the beautiful Susquehanna Bridge. The peak was reached on July 6th when 24,232 cars containing returning holiday tourists paid $4,745 to cross. The crossing was at the rate of 1,000 an hour.

If the bridge revenue maintains an average of the first year's receipts, Mr. Codd pointed out, the bonded indebtedness of the structure probably will be retired in fifteen years, rather than the 20-year period for which the bonds were originally issued.

Favorable comment has been noted from motorists on the fairness of the charges across the toll bridge and the handling of traffic, particularly at peak times.

HAVRE DE GRACE DISTILLERY TO OPERATE

The plant of the Harford Pure Rye Distillers, Inc., located at Havre de Grace, has been purchased by Messrs. M. I. Speert and E. M. Fleischman, of Baltimore, and will be placed in operation about the middle of November under the new firm name of Harford County Distillers, Inc.

The purchase price was not disclosed. There are three large brick buildings with a total floor space of 46,250 feet, another small brick building a power house. The plant has its own water system. A private railroad siding runs into the plant.

The crowd doesn't analyze. If a leader does something quietly, people yawn; if he does it with a daring flourish, they cheer.
