HOPE.

No matter where we sail
A storm may come to wreck us,
A bitter wind to check us
In the quest for unknown lands,
And our eyes on the same
Then when my ship goes down,
What choice is left to me
Keep leaping in the sea,
And willingly forsake
All that the sea can take,
Then "when my ship goes down"
Still, in spite of storm,
From all we feel or fear
A rescue may be near.
Though to poets blow their best
A manly heart can rest.
Still, in spite of storm!

Slingtire's Bad Boy.

Bijah's next visitor was a middle aged mother, whoseame in with her son a boy of twelve. She had noticed him there by telling him that the place was a bazar of fashion, and that she would buy him a embroidered prize barrel full of gum drops. He realized the deception as soon as seated, and loudly called out:

"I want that lone shot gun, or somebody'll become a badayer!"

Bijah's mouth watered for joy, and the other child

"I am a widow, and can do nothing with him. He runs out nights, gives me unlimited trouble and anxiety, and will pay no heed to anything I say. I have brought him here to have you talk to him as a father would."

"Madame, go home and return for him in about an hour," said Bijah. "It seem to see what he needs, and I want to be a father to him for about sixty minutes."

"You would thrash him?" she queried.

"I'd like to see him try it on!" answered the boy.

"Madam, go home—leave it all to me and fear not," said the old man as he waved her out. When she had departed he turned to the boy and smiled at the boy like a June sun coming out from behind a bone boiling establishment.

"Open that door, or I'll break in in here," growled the boy.

"Boy, don't you want to be as good as you are purty?"

"No, sir!"

"Can't I induce you to be good?"

"No, sir!"

"Won't you promise me to pause in your mad career?"

"No, I won't!"

"Come into the tack parlor my son—come in where I keep them gum drops mentioned in chapter one."

The lad declared he wouldn't, but three minutes later found him in there, and in that position of expectation assumed by all boys who have been drawn over the parental knee. Reaching out for a shingle, Bijah said:

"It almost breaks my heart, but love for my country forces me on. The trouble with you is that you haven't been half spanked since you got out of dresses. I am now about to give you one of the neatest and most effective shingling ever performed on this stage, and I'm ready to bet ten to one that it will instil humbler and nobler thoughts into your sassy soul."

"If you don't let me go I'll bite!" yelled the boy, but when he struck, his teeth encountered a sole-leather pad expressly provided for such occasions. Lovely boy then broke away until the door was in his grip on the floor, and then commenced a circus that would have made a tale to thrill with horrors. Bijah had lost his talent to become a pirate in thirty seconds more he had got over wanting to bite; in three minutes he had come to the conclusion that his mother ought to run the house, and then Bijah let up on him and began to sell.

"My son, has this thing affected you any? That is, do you feel like a different boy?"

"You'll get paid for this!" shouted the lad.

"Duty points with outstretched finger," sighed Bijah. "Come over my knee once more, my son, and while this gets in its work may your hardened heart begin to melt.

On Linden when the sun was low
A shingle up and down did go.

The boy kicked and bit and held out for a time, but the inevitable came at last to stare him in the face, and he called out:

"That's enough—I'll do better!"

"Boy, do you mean it?" asked the old man, as his elbow ceased working.

"You mean that you'll quit sassing your poor mother, stay home at night, let bad language alone, and, in fact, walk in a better path?"

"I do," was the earnest reply.

"I'm glad of it—glad on't. I knew what you needed and I see that you feel better for it. We will now adjourn to the reception room and I'll prepare a surprise for your mother."

In about thirty minutes her knock was heard at the door, and as it was opened for her she exhibited the greatest amazement. The boy's face was washed clean, his hair cut, his nails pared clean and the change was what Bijah called, a herculaneum improvement.

"I—I—" she stammered, when he said:

"This is your boy, ready to go home. He has promised to be good. I shall keep an eye on him for a while, and shall expect frequent reports from you. If he continues to be good he shall have half the melon crop on my farm. If he is bad I shall have him brought here again."

"Great heavens! but how did you do it?" whispered the mother as the boy passed out.

"Only as hitting a barn with a stub," he replied. "Shingles, woman, shingles! There's more goodness and higher intelligence in one pine shingle, after you get the boy in the right position, than in all the coaxing and wheedling which tongue can produce. I've enjoyed it hugely—just feel as if I'd eaten dinner; if he doesn't tread up bring him again."

She followed the boy out, and the old man sat down his peaches and mused:

"I believe in moral suasion first, and I believe in coaxing and reasoning, but nothing seems to soften a bad boy all the way up to the eyes like a Michigan pine shingle laid on in one steady spot."—Detroit Free Press.

A Yankton Judge,

Mr. Webster's attorney (rising and addressing the attorney for the other side)—"I call you a coward and a liar."

The Court—"Sit down, sir."

Mr. Webster's attorney—"He is a coward and a liar."

The Court—"I tell you to sit down and be quiet."

Mr. Webster's attorney—"He is a coward and a liar."

The Court—"If you don't sit down and keep quiet you will be sorry."

Mr. Webster's attorney—"He is—"

In the subsequent proceedings the Court took a hand. It swiftly glided from its seat and placed its powerful grasp upon the collar of the attorney for Mr. Webster. There was a momentary void in the understanding of that gentleman. The morning stars began to sing together in his ears and danced before his confused vision. Then he found himself outside the building without his hat, and the dusty zephyrs playing through his luxuriant moustache. Parties present in the room as innocent spectators aver that the feet of the attorney for Mr. Webster did not touch the floor after the muscles of the hand of the court had contracted upon the collar of his coat.—*Yankton (Dak.) My "Millinery Opening" of this spring was such a GRAND success that I desire now to renew my request to those who saw the display of Hats and Bonnets, and to the public generally, to call and examine my stock of "Untrimmed Hats and Bonnets" and trimmings for the same. I have left nothing undone (in my selection of stock) to please the most fastidious, and can to day show a stock (in variety and cheapness) equal to any in this town. This being the first town on the shore is saying enough. I make no boast of superior stock, nor skill, nor cheaper goods, nor any thing else, for I believe that other have equal facilities with myself; but while I do not claim superiority, I do emphatically deny that others have superior facilities to mine. SPRING & SUMMER FASHIONS, 1879.

JUST RECEIVED

And I would like every one to call and see them, and leave their measure for a new suit. I guarantee all work made in my shop to fit, and made in the best manner. I could refer you to the Bishop and his laymen, to the politician and his constituents, but I do not, for the reason that I want my work to stand on its own merits. If I misfit, I am ready to pay for goods or refund the money. References are cheap. I do not resort to them, as I would not please a friend in so awkward a position as to recommend me above any other person. That's the kind of a man I am.

Cutting done in the best manner for the public, and made plain so any one can put it together.
