RUSSIAN RHEUMATISM CURE HAS PROVED TO BE THE REMEDY
FOR RHEUMATISM.

MARION, IND., Aug. 18, 1885.
My wife was afflicted with rheumatism in her shoulder and arm that the doctors could do nothing for her, and she could not sleep in bed, but had to be bolstered up in a rocking chair. Physicians prescribed, many patent medicines were used, but the pain still got worse. I sent for the Russian Rheumatism Cure, under a cloud of doubts. It was used according to directions for one week, and my wife was cured. It was one of those surprises that you meet once in a lifetime. It is now over four months since the cure was effected, and she can wash, iron, hoe in the garden, and do all kinds of work as well as ever, and has no symptoms of the old disease. We have no hesitancy in recommending the cure to all similarly afflicted, as days and sure.
Truly yours,
H. J. FISHELL.
Thousands of others have been cured.
PRICE $2.50.

NOVEMBER.
The year is waning! Solemn sounds are heard
Among the branches of each wind-tossed tree;
Brown looks the grass; no floral gems we see;
Forsaken nests by winds alone are stirr'd,
And not by wing of bird.
The skies look cold—wind-driven clouds send by,
While fitful gales whirl sere, dry leaves away;
Fair once like friends who come to us one day,
Creep to the heart, bring love-light to the eye,
Then droop and fade and die.
Yet, while winds chill and summer joys depart,
A host of other pleasures now doth come;
Brothers and sisters scattered, all come home,
Thanksgiving cheer abounds, while fond smiles start,
As heart responds to heart.
Then, curtains down, around the fire we press,
To sing and jest, to romp and laugh and play;
But while the fun goes round, each heart can say
"November brings Thanksgiving, Lord, we bless Thee for our happiness!"

Agricultural.

THE PLAN OF SOILING CATTLE.
A correspondent of the American Farmer says: The plan of soiling cattle and other animals instead of allowing them large acres of scanty pasture to find their feed is getting to be, year after year, a growing necessity, and is recommended by a number of considerations which appear to us pretty well conclusive. We believe in a modified system of soiling. We think that cattle, hogs and horses should have, at least in summer, small and convenient pasture grounds in which they may find shade and water, take moderate exercise, and have the benefit of the untainted breezy atmosphere, while their food is raised in other localities and brought to their stalls. This much, it seems to us, is demanded by the supreme considerations of health and growth. Cattle, under such circumstances, properly fed, will take but little exercise, that, and only that, which a healthful condition demands. We must never forget that all motion involves waste of the body; that just as the power of the steam engine is measured by the amount of fuel consumed, so the animal organism wastes in the exact proportion of its physical activity. Every exhibition of animal power, whether muscular or nervous, is attended and measured by the disintegration and death of the tissues called into play. When fattening is the only idea, then physical quiescence, as perfect as possible, is the obvious indication. But for growth and health is demanded that exercise, which, while it wastes, also repairs and renews the tissues. We saw, last summer, on the farm of a gentleman, about twenty miles north of Philadelphia, 100 milch cows that were kept confined throughout the year. The barn was the finest we ever saw, and the arrangements for comfort, convenience and cleanliness seemed about perfect. No grazing whatever was allowed, and we were told that absolute soiling had been resorted to only after repeated trials had shown that there was a decided diminution of milk whenever the cows were allowed to graze. The cows—all Holsteins — were perfectly gentle and seemed supremely contented.

A few days afterwards we visited a world known farm near Syracuse, N. Y., and inspected several magnificent herds—in all 500 head—of thoroughbred and imported Holsteins. The plan adopted on this farm is exactly the one we have recommended, that is, the cows were turned on small pastures a good part of every day in the summer, but generally fed night and morning in their stalls. The cows were as docile as could be desired, but they exhibited more life and animation in their looks and movements, the hair was more glossy, and the skin more elastic to the touch, all indicating high health and condition.

This modified system of soiling is recommended by considerations which seem to us conclusive:

1st. The first advantage is that it keeps the animals and the owner acquainted, securing on their part docility and gentleness; thoughtful care and attention on his, and on both a pleasing and charming attachment. When ever this state of things exist, losses alike from neglect, and from accidents and disease, will be fewer and less. Cattle always suffer when deprived of their 'owner's daily watch and care. The lack of this attention is painfully illustrated in those gaunt and wretched animal frames that seldom see any food from their owner's crib, but are turned upon the commons and are virtually told to get their living as they can, and all the better if they do it by trespass on the fields of neighbors. In constant peril of bludgeon stones, shot guns and dogs, they are at once worthless to their owners and a pest and enemy to the community.

2nd. It is by long odds the cheapest and most economical plan. An acre in good heart will furnish several times as much food as a similar acre in pasture. The only difference is that we have to cut or mow the food instead of requiring the cattle to get it in their own way. But this additional labor by human hands substitutes a far more costly labor by our domestic animals. It must be done; shall it be we or they? That is the only question. Every consideration demands that we should do it. We can do it intelligently, selecting the best time of the day, choosing the best instruments and doing the work when the food is in most suitable condition and when least damage is done to the soil. And when we give this matter a little forethought and prepare to furnish suitable and abundant food to our domestic animals that look to human hands for support, it is wonderful how much food can be raised and how easily the good work is accomplished. Rye and the grasses in spring, and an unbroken succession of Indian corn from July to December, from wonderful small areas for the animals to be fed, will furnish the food in rich and easy abundance.

3rd. But with advancing time the yield becomes more abundant, the work relatively less, and the results in every way more satisfactory in consequence of the rapid and constant improvement of the soil, which will be certain to follow the judicious employment of the plan recommended. The drain upon the soil is vastly diminished. Instead of removing from the land all of its yield, as we do when we sell the great staples, only a small part is removed when we convert the yield of the soil into meat, milk and butter.

The excrements and urine, properly husbanded, are restored to the soil, and vast quantities of domestic manures from leaves, pine tags, straw, stalks, etc., are made at little cost, and to the comfort of the animals. Acre after acre may be thus enriched, and at length the whole farm brought to its maximum productiveness.

The Star Joker.

Uncle Davis in a Box.
An old farmer whose wrinkled face and white hair were evidences that he had passed a good many mile-posts on the journey to the grave, drove up to a grocery on Michigan avenue and hitched his team. Some boys climbed up on his load after he was out of sight, and in the back end of the wagon discovered a dead snake about seven feet long. It was flung to the ground and carried off to frighten small boys and girls.

"Purty chilly," said the farmer as he entered the grocery.

"Yes. What you got this morning?"

"Oh, butter'n eggs and a few 'taters. Say I killed the biggest snake back here by the toll-gate you ever saw."

"Pshaw!"

"Well, I did! He was curled up beside a log, half frozen, and I laid him out with a club. He's ten feet long if he's an inch."

"Come, come, Uncle Davis! It's getting too late in the year for snake stories. How much butter have you got?"

"Didn't I kill no snake?"

"Of course not."

"I didn't eh? Well, I did, and what's more I brought him along to show just such fellers as you. I knew you'd pooh-pooh me, but you just come out to the wagin,"

"Oh, you're too old for this sort of thing. How much for the eggs?"

"You come along! When a man hints that I lie my honor is at stake. Come right out."

The grocer followed him out, and Uncle Davis climbed upon the hind wheel and remarked: "I may have stretched the length a little, but I tell you he's a whop——"

The snake was gone! He looked up and down and around and poked over the hay, but there was no whopper.

"Come, Uncle Davis, you'd better go down and see a doctor this morning," soothingly remarked the grocer.

"I'll be blamed if I do, and you go to Halifax!" replied the old man, and he unhitched and drove off with his face as red as a beet.—Detroit Free Press.

Equal to the Emergency.
I was going along the road away out on Dorchester avenue the other day, at a place where an orchard adjoins a grove, and I happened to see a policeman peering warily into the trees.

"What is it?" said I.

"Look in there behind that wall," said he.

I did, and there was a boy, about twelve years old, barefooted, with a tuft of hair sticking out through a ho'e in his hat, pegging stones into a pear tree and knocking down pears. The policeman worked his way in through the trees and jumped on the boy before he saw either one of us.

"Aha!" said the policeman; "I've caught you at it!"

"Caught me at what!" said the boy.

"Stealing pears."

"Ste—steal—stealin' pears!" said the boy, in great astonishment. "I haint been stealin' no pears!"

"Haint, eh? Then what are you doing with these here in your pockets?"

The boy's trousers pockets were stuffed out on both sides with pears.

"Oh, these," said he; 'why I found 'em layin' 'round here on the ground, and I was firin' 'em back on the tree where they belong!"—Boston Record.

Dividing the Estate.
"Ah, good-morning, Mr. Skinner," remarked lawyer Fleecem, as he met his fellow lawyer on the street. "I hear old Richfield died last night."

"Yes," responded the other; "I am the attorney for his daughter, and I' just going up to see her."

"Indeed! Well, I'm the attorney for his son. Can't we make a little something out of this?"

Lawyer Skinner stroked his chin reflectively.

"I think we might," he said. "I'll advise Miss Richfield to contest the will. I'll tell her that her brother has no right to half the estate, and that if she will only go to Court she might as well have it all."

"Um—yes; and I'll defend it for her brother. But, suppose I am defeated?"

"Then appeal it."

"And if you're defeated?',

"Why, I'll appeal it."

"But when it gets to the highest court?"

"Oh, well, we'll have the estate ourselves then, and we'll divide it."—Rambler.

Women vs. Men.
Women jump at conclusions, and generally hit; men reason things out logically—and commonly miss it.

Some women can't pass a millinary store without looking in; some men can't pass a saloon without going in.

A woman never sees a baby without wanting to run to it; a man never sees a baby without wanting to run from it.

A woman carries her purse in her hand so that other women will see it; a man carries his in his inside pocket so that his wife won't see it.

When a woman wants to repair damages she uses a pin; when a man wants to repair damages he spends two hours and a half trying to thread a needle.—Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Howard James, manager Stuckert's Livery, 619 N. 5th street, Philadelphia, Pa., says. After trying all other remedies without relief, for a heavy cold on the chest, accompanied by a severe cough, I used Red Star Cough Cure, and in a very short time was entirely well.

Miscellaneous.

Valuable Farm for Sale
The subscriber offers for sale, and on easy terms, a farm of 300 acres, situate on Choptank river.
The soil is a rich loam and adapted to the growth of wheat, corn, hay, clover, vegetables and fruits.
Within the last four years it has had 15,000 Bushels of Lime
spread upon it, which the purchaser will reap the advantage of.
As a site for a first-class
PEACH FARM
it is not excelled by any place on the peninsula.
It has a bold water front of two miles and steamboats passing and repassing daily. No distance to haul produce, and little expense in shipping.
The farm is improved by a two-and-a-half story brick mansion, 34x39 feet, with 8 large rooms and a large hall on each floor, and a frame addition 18x32 feet, ample farm buildings, and a frame tenement house of six rooms.
There is a splendid shad and herring fishery on the shore. Rock and perch fish in abundance. Game incident to the country abound in the neighborhood.
A private avenue runs from the public road through the farm to the river.
The place will beautifully divide into four farms, giving 200 acres to each, with sufficient wood and grazing marsh for each.
This farm is located near the projected airline railroad from Salisbury to Baltimore.
It is offered at a great bargain, and only because it is owned by a gentleman not engaged in farming, and who is unable to give it his personal attention. Possession given January 1st, 1887.
The subscriber will be pleased to show the property to any one wishing to see it, and give all necessary information as to terms of sale.
