Garden Tour Of Queen Anne's Arranged For May 1st And 2d

to the public and it is hoped that it may become an annual occasion when many more of the historical places will be on view.

This trip can be made by entering the county from the north through Chestertown to Church Hill, then to Centreville to Queenstown and taking the Eastern Shore Boulevard to Wye Mills or from the south by Wye Mills and reversing the above route. Those coming by way of Matapeake ferry can go first to Queenstown then to Wye Mills, Centreville and Church Hill.

In the center of Church Hill on the west of the main street is one of the oldest church buildings in Queen Anne's County. This is St. Luke's Protestant Church, whcih was built about 1728. It is a beautiful colonial brick structure. On each side of the chancel hang tablets, one of the Lord's Prayer and the other of the Ten Commandments, which are said to have been given by Queen Anne of England. For years before it was a chapel of ease of St. Paul's, Centreville, but was made a separate parish before the present building was erected. Its communion service is one of the most beautiful in the Diocese of Easton.

On Railroad Avenue to the east of Commerce Street in Centreville is an interesting old brick home called "Yellow Brick". It was built by Judge Richard Bennett Carmichael during the early eighteen hundreds and for the past ninety years has been occupied by the Keating family. The doors, the stairways and other features of this house are very attractive, and to add interest it is furnished in antiques. It is owned and occupied by the Misses Keating.

St. Paul's Parish was established in 1692 and its first three churches were about a mile and a half out of Centreville on the Queenstown road, the first being erected in 1650. The timbers used in construction of one of these churches was given by the owner and builder of Reed's Creek. The present church building, now situated on South Liberty Street in Centreville is over a hundred years old and some of the timbers and bricks from the old church were used in its consutruction.

Just outside of Centreville on Wharf Lane are the home and gardens of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. Brown, Jr. These are modern and embrace about an acre. For quick growth are planted many Lombardy Poplars and with a background of flowering shrubs there are gardens in different colors, one blue, one yellow, another pink, as well as others.

Reed's Creek Farm is in Wright's Neck and is reached by taking a road turning to the right about three miles out of Centreville on the Queenstown road. The house was built by Col. Thomas Wright in 1774, and is of brick with a big square central mass, with modillioned cornice and huge chmineys at each end. The rooms are large with high ceiling and many have great fire places. A hall makes its way straight through the building, with another hall branching from it at right angles at the back to provide for the massive stairway with its curious balustrade.

In the kitchen is a huge fire place large enough for a person to stand upright, where cooking originally was done in spits and in dutch ovens.

The timbers used in this building were hewn by hand and the nails are handwrought.

In the center of Queenstown, opposite where the Court House once stood is the home of Mrs. Cockey, which was a pre-revolutionary gaol. A chained skeleton, in an up-right position is said to have been found in a cellar dungeon in this building.

Across the road, back of where the old court was is a place called "Gallows Field". In this field malefactors were hung, thieves were flogged at the whipping post, breakers of the Sabbath were placed in stocks and gossips were immersed in the ducking pond.

Adjoining Queenstown is Bolingly with a long attenuated house, built probably about 1732. This tract was bestowed on James Bculen by Lord Baltimore in 1662. It was owned by Henry Hawkins in 1675, and in time passed to Mary Neale Hall, in 1812. It is an exceedingly attractive house with a magnificent stairway and beautiful grounds. Every room has a water view. It is now owned and occupied by Mr. and Mrs. S. E. W. Friel.

Just across the road from Bolingly on Queenstown Creek is an attractive home and garden owned by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Onley. The house was built out of a granary over a hundred years old and has the original wide floor boards of many colonial buildings.

On the left of the road from Queenstown to Wye Mills, about two miles out, stands Bloomingdale patented by one Captain Morris in 1665. Jacob Seth owned it in 1684 and it was purchased in 1820 by Edward Harirs, who left it to his daughters Sally and Mary. Many interesting stories are told about Miss Sally and at her death this property was willed by her to Severn Teackle Wallis of Baltimore. It is now owned by the estate of Hiram G. Dudley. The house is of brick, the early portion being built about 1706, the main part being erected in 1790. The octagonal porticos, the halls, stairway, mantels and cupboards are exceedingly attractive. At one time it had a garden of many acres.

Just before one comes to the village of Carmichael, which is two miles down the road which leaves the state road on the right a short distance east of Bloomingdale, is found the old Carmichael Homestead. This was built by William Carmichael and was the home of Judge Richard Bennett Carmichael, his son, who was one of the most eminent jurists in Maryland. On account of his intense belief in the supremacy of the civil law he was dragged from the bench and imprisoned in a Federal Fort during the war between the States. The house was built in the late seventeen hundreds and is of brick. The panelling and stairway are of the period. This place is now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas K. Dudley.

Continuing through Carmichael about three miles on the left of the road just before crossing to Wye Island is "Wye Plantation". This was one of the homes of William Paca, the signer of the Declaration of Independence, Governor of Maryland, Judge in several courts, a friend of George Washington, and is also the site of his grave and monument.

The house on this place was probably built in the early seventeen hundreds and with its large roms, panelling, stairway and covered ways to slave quarters is very interesting. At one time it had a large garden, with shrubs and trees from all parts of the world and with several terraces going down to Wye River. This place is now owned by Mrs. Robert Gibson, who was a Miss McKenney of Centreville.

Japanese Beetles Resist Winter, Deep In The Earth

Cold weather in the area now infested by the Japanese beetle—roughly eastern Pennsylvania and the southern two-thirds of New Jersey—seems to be no hindrance to the grubs hibernating in the ground.

Recent studies by entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture show that numbers of this destructive pest in the soil do not decrease in winter, usually the season of heaviest insect mortality. Even the abnormally cold winter of 1933-34 in the East killed comparatively few beetle grubs.

Outside the generally infested areas, the Japanese beetle is found in isolated cases and light infestations in New England, as far south as South Carolina and as far west as St. Louis. It may advance 10 to 15 miles of its own accord in a year, but is occasionally transported great distances as a stowaway on fruit, flowers, or vegetables.

Low temperatures, entomologists explain, stop activities of disease organisms that prey on larvae of the beetle in the soil in warm weather. Furthermore, the larvae, or grubs, of the beetle —the overwintering form—go down so deep into the ground that they are beyond the reach of intense cold as well as of birds and other predators feeding at the surface.

Japanese beetles in the ground reach greatest numbers early in September at the end of 2 months of active egg laying. Then they decrease until the weather gets cold. Return of warm weather starts another decrease in the number found in the ground—most striking in May and early June.
