NATIONAL SHRINES

I was in Florida the past winter and with thousands of other patriotic citizens visited one of the national shrines, The Fountain of Youth at St. Augustine.

Here is a shrine dating back to the beginning of things as far as the white man is concerned, that is truly American. In fact it might be considered the birthplace, as the stone cross marking the landing place of Ponce de Leon is fairly well authenticated.

There is everything here to thrill and interest the visitor who is interested in the history of his country from the Indian burial ground with the numerous skeletons in situa, exposed and preserved just as they were buried, to the relics of the Spanish occupation to the present.

While it is all very beautiful, how completely out of keeping are the plants that have been used to embellish the place.

One would think the eternal fitness of things should have received a little attention and native plants, of which there is such a wealth available, should have been used to preserve the proper atmosphere of the place, yet the great majority of plants used while very nice for landscaping a home are certainly not in keeping with the atmosphere of the place, and only produce a shoddyness instead of truth and beauty.

We Americans use foreign plants almost to the exclusion of our own native flora in planting our homes but one would think at national shrines they should be all American.

Among the plants that dominated the scene at The Fountain of Youth were:

Causerina, Australian Pine from Australia, Crotons from Malaya, Ligustrum Lusidum from the Orient, Palms from Australia, Ficus Repens from the Orient, English Ivy, etc.

How much truer and finer the setting would be if native plants such as the magnificent Live Oaks, Southern Magnolias, Southern Jasmine, Cedar, Bald Cypress, Florida Palms and other native to the locality had been planted.

NOTEWORTHY HOMES

On the Eastern Shore we always think of the fine homes and gardens as being on the water fronts, yet there are many noteworthy inland farms and homes that do not depend on the water view for their charm and beauty.

Among them is the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Turpin. Standing back from the Centreville Road near Wye Mills it is beatifully located surrounded by fertile fields in a high state of cutivation.

Standing as it does so far from the road the passerby does not see the planting and improvements that have been planted to soften the lines of the buildings and give a setting and background for them producing a combination of utility and beauty.

Mrs. Turpin is an enthusiastic gardener.

Flower gardens have been laid out, lawns developed, trees, evergreens and shrubs planted that as time goes on will develop into a beautiful setting.

WINTER INJURY

I'm a winter dodger myself and went down to Florida to escape the cold. While there the extreme cold experienced all over the country was daily reported in the newspapers, perhaps to make us more contented with the disagreeable moisture and coolness that was prevalent in Florida. Many wished they were up north in their heated homes. Colds were common and there was very little bathing.

To me the question of what was happening to the plants at home on the Eastern Shore was the important one. So many plants were either injured or killed outright the two previous winters and another with prolonged zero weather made me feel very pessimistic.

Would there be any of those plants left, such as the fig, crepe myrtle, boxwood for which the gardens of the Eastern Shore are famous?

It was gratifying to find the winter injury to the plants was not nearly so bady as anticipated, in fact not so bad as last year. It perhaps is a little soon to be quite sure. Pomegranate plants which are rather tender seem to be uninjured. Figs are killed back a little, some of the varieties of Roses appear to be killed but on the whole the damage is much lighter than expected which is much to be thankful for, considering the severity of the winter.

Seed Loans To Be Pared Down

Queen Anne's Allowed Only 15. Top Figures $72.73

A sharp cut has been made in the number and amount of emergency feed, seed and fertilizer loans permitted to Queen Anne's county farmers this year. The loans are now available but the county has been limited to a quota of fifteen and the top figure for each loan pegged at $72.73.

In past years the number of loans allowed was unlimited. Any farmer who could qualify was accommodated. In 1935 thirty-eight loans were taken out in Queen Anne's.

The crimp put in total loans is also severe. In past years a total of $300 was allowed as the ultimate top figure. In Queen Anne's county loans were kept well under that sum with $150 used as the unofficial maximum. While the limit for this year is theoretically $200 the ceiling set for the county is $72.73.

As in past years the loans are short term affairs and must be paid by October 31. They bear interest at 5½% and are secured by a lien on all crops or livestock for which the loan is made.

Loans are made only in cases where farmers can not obtain credit otherwise. A loan emergency committee of five members is to be appointed during the coming week to pass on all applications.

The committee named to pass on loans this year includes James P. Brown, Church Hill; F. Bennett Carter, Centreville; Harry A. Moore, Queen Anne; and Merton R. Shawn, Queenstown.
