When Director Joseph Santley viewed the rushes of a football scene for "We Went to College," he discovered Jean Harlow among the extras. Miss Harlow had two hours off between scenes in "Suzy" so she went on a tour of the M-G-M studios. On the back lot she found the football game in progress. As she was in make-up, no one discovered her playing extra until the day's film was screened.

NEWS ITEM:—"'Lipstick and rouge are as essential as clothes and almost as vital as food to the housewife and working girl in their struggle for social and economic security,' says Dr. A. A. M. Dewing, assailing Maryland 10% tax on cosmetics."

Courtesy N. Y. World-Telegram

Editor's Note: As Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Maryland Pharmaceutical Association Mr. Dewing's recent report to that body embraced state and national law-making activities. The concluding paragraph anent cosmetics and toilet articles from which sources the Federal Government has for several years imposed a 10% tax, plus an extra 10% levied by Maryland, has recently made the Metropolitan newspaper headlines. The impression prevails that it is absurd to consider soap and allied items as a taxable luxury. We are indebted to the New York World-Telegram, issue July 1, for the above wherein cartoonist Johnstone injects a parodial humor.

Shore Has Few Jobs For White Collar Group, Cooks In Demand

Citing the difficulty of finding places for the "white collar" group and unskilled labor in his territory E. O. Willis, district manager of the National Reemployment Service for Kent, Queen Anne's, Caroline, Talbot and Dorchester counties advises boys to learn a trade as one of the best forms of job assurance.

Mr. Willis reports that there is no surplus of skilled labor in the five counties. Work can be found for electricians, steam fitters, plumbers and craftsmen of most types.

On the other hand the district office has a long waiting list of the white collar group. Plenty of teachers, engineers, clerks, stenographers and bookkeepers are available, with virtually no openings.

High school graduations have freed a large number of young people with academic training only. These youths are hard to place as applicants usually have no experience at all to fit them for vacancies.

In this connection Mr. Willis suggests that vocational courses in high schools be encouraged and enlarged that graduates may have some background to help them get positions.

Placing watermen from January to May is the greatest problem that the service has to face. At the present time, however, most of them are busy. Their occupation is seasonal and earnings are frequently insufficient to carry them the year around. The service finds them hard to refer to private employment or places other than road work.

Agricultural laborers furnish a large number of applicants for work. In the summer the service is able to place them as harvest hands, fruit and tomato pickers, and to an extent in canneries. Difficulties in placement arise because many in the agriculture group seek employment only near home.

Of the other unskilled classes, building construction laborers can be referred to jobs. Industrial labor is not an important feature in the five counties, the chief type being cannery work. This is seasonal, and out of season there are almost no openings. There is plenty of work for road laborers.

Many women are seeking employment through the service. At present the district is short of good domestics and cooks. There are plenty of practical nurses, stenographers, bookkeepers and women day workers on the waiting lists.

The district office is seeking to have canneries place Shore help as far as possible this year.

Employers are asked to notify the offices at Easton whenever they have vacancies to be filled. Those needing work are invited to register.

As a means of speeding contact with the district office Mr. Willis believes that agents should be appointed in each county through whom employers may seek workers and workers be more easily reached.
