Who Gets The Boodle Snow Hill—The odd situation of the Worcester county commissioners being told that their position in litigation was correct but the Court could do nothing to help them resulted from a suit and counter suit through which the commissioners sought to have turned over to the county some $16,000 in profits from the county liguor dispensaries. Judge James M. Crocket held that the money should be paid over to the county but said the Court lacked jurisdiction to order it done. The sum at issue represents half of the 1936 liquor profits held back by the Liquor Control Board because they were not sure whether to pay it to Worcester county or divided it among four incorporated towns.
