of this deſtructive element was arreſted without the loſs of any buildings. This is the ſecond fire of the woods the preſent ſeaſon in the vicinity of Albany, whether by accident or deſign is unknown. Individuals have ſuffered conſiderably by the deſtruction of their fire wood, which had been cut and collected into piles during the laſt winter. [Albany Gazette.]

We found it to be the St. George's Packet, Morſe, from New-York for Edenton, N. C. The ſloop ſtanding in, in company with capt. Morſe, wore round and ſtood off. Captain Morſe informs, that on the morning of the 27th, he was ſtanding in for the land, the weather thick and heavy, at day light found himſelf cloſe in with the land, which he judged to be from 60 to 80 miles N. of Cape Hatteras, ſaw a white bottomed brig a ſhort diſtance ahead of him go on ſhore, which he ſuppoſed to be a Charleſton packet that ſailed in company with him from New York. About an hour after captain Morſe had went on ſhore, a ſloop hove in ſight and came to anchor to the leeward of the bar; about half an hour after ſhe came to anchor we ſaw her maſt go over her ſide—ſhe rode out the gale. On the 29th, coming out over the bar, ſpoke the ſchr. PHILADELPHIA, June 7.

Extract of a letter from a reſpectable houſe in Liſbon, dated April 26th, to a merchant in this city.

"The favorable appearance of our market for proviſions, at the time we wrote you laſt, entirely diſappeared. The direct importations from America had begun to effect our prices, which would probably have declined ſomething more from this cauſe alone, but they have been compleatly brought down by the unexpected importation of a number of cargoes, of both flour and wheat, from England, and the arrival of ſeveral others from different ports of Spain, both to the north and ſouth, where the markets are equally, and in ſome of them more, overſtocked than ours. We note you our preſent rates; a favorable change in which can only be expected, ſhould the war, which appears more than likely, actually break out. Even then, we do not think the effect upon our prices would be very ſudden, as the ſtock on hand, particularly flour, is very great, and the proſpect of our coming crop tolerably favorable."

Flour offered at ſeven dollars per barrel, but purchaſers will not give more than ſix.

Wheat 1 50 per buſhel—little demand.

Indian corn 80 cents do. If the importations are not too abundant, will probably riſe a little.

Pork, 22 to 24 } per bl. in ſmall parcels.
Beef, 12 15 }
Pipe ſtaves, 70 to 75 } per 1200—dull.
Barrel do. 18 20 }

FEDERAL GAZETTE.

WEDNESDAY, June 8.

The paper called the Federal Gazette, at Baltimore, is in perfect accord with the Royal Gazette of New-York, and with the paper in this city that recommends the ſwords of all honeſt men to be drawn againſt the government. This Baltimore Gazette gives the following APHORISM. Liberty is a fine ſounding word; but moſt of thoſe who uſe it, mean nothing more by it than a liberty to oppreſs others—themſelves uncontroled by any ſuperior authority.

This article is carefully copied, like all other articles hoſtile to the principles of the government, into Poulſon's paper, one of the papers in which the Laws of the United States are publiſhed! [Aurora.]

[O! Wonderful wonder of wonders! and dares "one of the papers in which the laws of the United States are publiſhed" to give currency to ſuch a libel upon the adminiſtration? Mr. Madiſon certainly deſerves to loſe both his noſe and office, if he does not puniſh the fancy Mr. Poulſon for publiſhing ſuch a blaſphemous aphoriſm, in the ſame way he has us for nearly the ſame crime—ſtop publiſhing the laws in his paper—and give them to ſome country democratic printer, whoſe dirty ſheet nobody reads.]

Communication.

Mavius, the firſt biſhop of Lauſanne, ſpeaking of the ſmall pox variola, in the annals of his own time, obſerves that it principally attacked horned cattle. This was in the year 570; and it does not appear to have attacked mankind until the year afterwards. It will turn out very ſingular, if the ſame animal which firſt had this diſeaſe, ſhould furniſh man with the beſt preventive of this dreadful malady.

[Connecticut Gazette.]

Married on Friday, the 3d inſtant, at the Friends' meeting, in the city of New-York, Joſeph Townſend, merchant, of Baltimore, to the amiable Eſther Hallet, of that city.

Died, at Wilmington, (Del.) on the 2d inſtant, Mrs. Mary Geddes, late widow of William Geddes, eſquire, of Maryland. Her remains were depoſited in the Preſbyterian burying ground, in Arch-ſtreet, Philadelphia, on the following morning.

A decree lately paſſed the French legiſlative body for a gold and ſilver coinage. The ſilver pieces are to be quarter francs, half francs, quarter franc, two franc pieces, and five franc pieces. The franc is to contain five grammes, of which nine tenths are to be pure ſilver, & one tenth alloy. The gold coinage is to be of twenty and forty franc pieces, each having nine tenths of gold and one-tenth of alloy. The copper pieces will be of two hundredths, three hundredths, and five hundredths of a frank. Thoſe coins are to bear on one ſide the head of the firſt conſul, with the legend "Bonaparte, Firſt Conſul," and on the other the value of each, ſurrounded by two branches of olive, with the legend "French Republic." The five franc pieces are to have the legend, "God protects France."

The French government, ſince the peace, has been indefatigable in collecting naval ſtores from the North of Europe. Five thouſand tons of hemp from Peterſburgh, and 10,000 tons from Riga, have lately arrived in France.

Geneneral Dumourier, Hamilton Rowan, and the rich Paul Beckford, were pall bearers at the celebrated Klopſtock's funeral.

Anecdote of Lord Kaims.

The character of lord Kaims is not ſo generally known, as for many cauſes it ought to be. He was one of thoſe enemies of our religion, who are the more dangerous to the unexperienced, as the more inſidious. From the eminent authority to which I owe the following anecdote, I do not heſitate to ſtake my credit upon its veracity; and, if called upon, I ſhall not be unwilling to ſtand forth to ſupport it. It has been omitted in every biography of Hume; it is one, indeed, which perſons of the claſs of Scotch biographers, were not very likely either to know, or, when ſpeaking of a Scotchman, to relate. Monboddo, Robertſon, Dr. Berkely, prebendary of Canterbury, and ſome other men of eminence, had paſſed the prior part of the day at the houſe of lord Kaims, and were preparing to take their leave, when their entertainer was haſtily ſummoned from the room. He did not return till after ſome time, when he entered the apartment with looks of the greateſt diſmay, followed by his daughter, Mrs. ——. This young lady had been married to a Mr. ——, a gentleman of large eſtate, but had ſo far forgotten what ſhe owed to her ſituation, that her huſband had, at length, diſcovered her infidelity, and ſent her home to her father. It was to receive her that the atheiſt had been ſummoned from the room.—The young lady, as we have mentioned, entered the apartment with him; and in preſence of the company, thus addreſſed him—"Nay, ſir, you have, of all men in the world, the leaſt juſtice in accuſing me: for my errors are only the unhappy fruit of your own. Yes, ſir, I accuſe you in the preſence of this company, of having been the cauſe of my crime, and conſequent miſery. It was from you I learned that I had nothing to dread from any future account. I loved my huſband, but in his long abſence, became momentarily attached to another. The reſtraints of religion were removed by your care in my education. I had nothing therefore to dread, but the conſequences of detection. The abſence of Mr. ——, put me at eaſe upon that head—he returned unexpectedly——."

[Monthly Regiſter.]

While war is expected in Europe, the friends of mankind are enquiring into the means of preſerving life with the greateſt comfort, and in the full length of it.—"Sir John Sinclair," ſays the excellent "Medical Repoſitory," of New York, "in his Eſſay on Longevity, wiſhes the following queſtions to have an extenſive circulation, and invites all perſons, as far as their experience and obſervation will admit, to anſwer them with minuteneſs and accuracy:

1. What is the effect of the climate in which you reſide, on the health and longevity of the human race?

2. What form is reckoned moſt conducive to health and longevity?

3. Is it found, that being deſcended from young and from healthy parents, is eſſential for good health and old age?

4. Is it found, that health and old age depend much on the diſpoſition or temper of the individual?

5. Is there any perceptible difference in conſequence of ſituation in life?

6. What profeſſions are reckoned favorable to longevity, or otherwiſe?

7. Are exerciſe and moderate labor found neceſſary for preſerving health and long life?

8. Have the long lived, in general been in the married ſtate?

9. Has the greateſt proportion of the long lived conſiſted of males or females?

10. Have there been any inſtances of perſons renewing their age, getting new teeth, new hair, &c.

11. What are the other circumſtances tending to promote long life?

12. What is the effect of diet on health and longevity?

13. What are the effects of cloathing?

14. What the effect of habitation, and difference of living in a town or country?

15. What are the effects of habits and cuſtoms in regard to early riſing, bathing, regular meals, regular ſleep; and, in particular, what are thoſe minute circumſtances on which it is ſuppoſed that health and longevity principally depend?

16. What are the rules regarding medicine which are accounted the moſt uſeful and ſalutary?

17. What are the moſt remarkable inſtances of longevity, and how are they authenticated?

18. What are the rules adopted by thoſe who have attained great age?

19. Have any tables of longevity been drawn up in your neighborhood, and how do they agree, &c.

20. Do any additional obſervations or particulars occur to you on the ſubject of health and longevity?"

Theſe are not queſtions of mere curioſity. The love of life will determine every man at ſome time of his life to make ſome obſervations upon them all. It will not then be leſs important to anſwer theſe queſtions when propoſed by a great man, than to one's ſelf in the enquiry after happineſs. Nor is a large portion of this uſeful knowledge difficult to obtain. If many, when aſked to report for future records, may ſeem to diſown any knowledge of this kind, yet in familiar life and converſation, no man is willing to be thought an entire ſtranger to theſe queſtions or their anſwers. To record theſe opinions and facts will render them more ſure for our own uſe and of more certain benefit to mankind.
