Worthy of Attention.

On THURSDAY,

The 27th of March, at the auction store of the subscriber, at 12 o'clock, will be offered for sale, the following VALUABLE PROPERTY, on terms that will then be made known, which will be accommodating:

FOUR PLANTATIONS, or TRACTS of unimproved LANDS, containing about 450 acres, each of Patented lands, being in Berk's county, and state of Pennsylvania—within about 100 and 10 miles of Philadelphia, being in the neighborhood of many respectable German settlers, of griss & saw Mills, and contiguous to the Schuylkill and Susquehannah rivers; waters that bring lumber and produce to Philadelphia and Baltimore. One is well watered, and abounds with excellent timber. The title clear and indisputable, being patented to, and will be conveyed by a gentleman of property and unexceptionable character in Baltimore.

Also,

25,000 acres of prime COTTON LANDS, patented in single thousand acre patents, and are adjoining each other, in Washington county, state of Georgia, upon the waters of the Ogetahee river, and within about 30 miles of Lewisville, the seat of government of the state, with clear and indisputable titles; and will be conveyed by the same gentleman, and sold single or all together. The character of the lands given by a gentleman of the first respectability residing in Georgia, who has been over them is as follows: "The general situation and quality of the soil is favorable to the culture of cotton and small grain. It is generally well watered, and abounds with excellent pine timber. The streams are frequently obstructed by heavy growths of vines and briars, a sure criterion of the richness of the soil. The situation of the streams are flattering inducements for the establishment of saw mills, and it is clear of any prior claims." The growing importance of cotton lands is well known, and these are in the vicinity of the seat of government.

HAMELN, January 2.

(Private Letter.)—I open my letter to inform you of the arrival of the Prussian Lt. col. Krusemarck, of his majesty's guards, he has dispatches for our commandant Barbou, and is furnished with full powers to put a stop to all hostilities at Hameln; and during the negociations to secure to us the necessary provisions. The mediation of the king of Prussia, has been accepted, on condition that the combined armies shall not undertake any thing offensive in the north. The king of Prussia, on his part, agreed to the proposals, upon condition, that the French columns of the army of the north, and the divisions of the grand army, advancing from the Mayn, should commit no hostilities against Hanover.

His imperial highness prince Louis, had signified to our commandant, that his army was ready to act, and only waited for a signal to advance. Every thing, however, is suspended, and the armies have been ordered to halt.

MUNICH, December 30.

The emperor Napoleon entered this city about one yesterday morning. He came through Passau on the 28th; that place was illuminated. He alighted here at the electoral residence, attended by prince Murat and general Duroc. To-morrow the Bavarian cannon, taken by the Austrians about a hundred years since, will be brought into this city with great solemnity. This artillery found in the arsenals of Vienna, has been presented to our elector by Napoleon.

January 1.

This morning the elector, accompanied by heralds, and a corps of the civic cavalry, was proclaimed king in all the public places of this city. This day the emperor Napoleon has invited the diplomatic corps. We are informed that the new king of Suabia, will come here to pay his respects to the emperor. This morning the emperor Napoleon, accompanied by the elector and a numerous retinue, rode thro' this city. This evening there is to be a general illumination.

A courier from M. Berthier, the French minister of the war department, has brought intelligence that the Batavian troops have left Vienna, and are upon their return to our republic. Forced loans are again talked of, to cover the last years deficit, of between thirty and forty millions of florins.

TRANSLATED

From French papers received at the office of the Public Ledger, by the ship Jane, capt. Evans, from Bourdeaux.

THIRTY-THIRD BULLETIN OF THE GRAND ARMY.

Austerlitz, 7th December.

The general in chief, Buxhowden has been killed, with many other Russian generals whose names are unknown. Our soldiers have collected great quantities of booty.

The Russian general Kutusow was wounded, and his son-in-law, a young man of great merit, killed.

The dead have been numbered, from which it appears that 18,000 Russians, 600 Austrians, and 900 French are killed. We have 7,000 Russians wounded. Including all, we have 3,000 French wounded; gen. Roger Valhuber is dead in consequence of his wounds. An hour before his death, he wrote the emperor as follows: "I wished to have done more for you; in one hour I shall be no more, I regret it not, since I have participated in a victory which assures to you a happy reign. When you shall think of those brave men who devoted themselves to you, remember me. It is enough for me to mention to you that I have a family, I need not recommend it to your protection."—General Kellerman, Sebastiani and Thiebout are out of danger. Generals Mausy & Demont are wounded, but not dangerously. It must be interesting to be informed of the different decrees successively made by the emperor in favor of the army, they are here subjoined.

The corps of general Buxhowden which occupied the left of the army consisted of 27,000 men; not a single one has rejoined the Russian army. It was exposed for several hours to the fire of 40 pieces of cannon, a part of which composed the artillery of the imperial guard. The carnage was horrible. The loss sustained by the Russians cannot be calculated at less than 45,000 men killed, wounded and made prisoners, & the residue who will return home with the emperor of Russia will not exceed 25,000. May this prove a salutary lesson to this young prince, and induce him to abandon the policy which English gold has purchased.

May he recur to those old principles which are adapted to the intesest of his country & character, and break the yoke imposed on him by the vile oligarchists of London. The great Catharine understood well, the genius and resources of Russia, when at the rime of the first coalition, she declined sending an army & was content to aid it with her counsels and good wishes. But she had the experience of a long reign, and a knowledge of the character of her nation, to guide her; she had reflected on the dangers of coalitions. This experience cannot be acquired at the age of 24 years.

When Paul, her son, marched his armies against France, he soon discovered that those errors are the least injurious which are the shortest: and after one campaign he withdrew his troops.

If Worronzow, (now in London) were not more an Englishman than a Russian, a very indifferent idea would be formed of his talents, to admit that he could suppose that 60, 80 or 100,000 Russians were competent to disgrace France, to induce her to bend to the British yoke, to abandon Belgium, and to force the emperor to resign his Italian crown to the degenerate race of the Sardinian sovereigns—The Russian troops are brave, but infinitely less so than the French. Their generals are quite inexperienced, and their soldiers so ignorant and stupid, as to render their arms by no means redoubtable.

Supposing moreover the possibility of the Russians being victorious, Russia herself must have been depopulated to have attained the senseless object, prescribed to them by the oligarchists of London.

The battle of Austerlitz took place near the tomb of the celebrated Kaunitz. This circumstance has made a strong impression among the people of Vienna.

By his prudence and judgment, and particularly by invariably maintaining harmony between France and Austria, he had brought Austria to a high degree of prosperity.

Here follow the names of the Russian generals made prisoners: many more were slain in the field of battle. There are moreover, 4 or 500 officers killed—among whom are reckoned 9 majors and lieut. colonels, and more than 100 captains.

Prebizenski, Wimpfen, Muller, Zakoumsky, Mulberg, Selechow, Strizy, Szerliakow, prince Repnin, prince Sibersky, Adrian, Lagonon, Salima, Mazenkow, Woyickoff.

The emperor has commanded M. Talleyrand, who was at Vienna, to repair to Brunn.

M. Maret has joined his majesty at Austerlitz.

The emperor slept last night at Brunn.

THIRTY-FOURTH BULLETIN OF THE GRAND ARMY.

Brunn, December 10.

The emperor received yesterday prince Repnin, made prisoner at the battle of Austerlitz at the head of the horse guards, of which he was the colonel. His majesty told him that it was not his wish to deprive the emperor Alexander of such brave troops, and that he had permission to collect all the prisoners of the Russian imperial guard, and return with them into Russia. His majesty expressed his regret that the emperor of Russia should have hazarded a battle, and observed that had his majesty been less sanguine he might have spared the blood and honor of his army.

Prince John, of Lichtenstein, arrived here yesterday invested with full powers to negociate. The conferences between him and M. Talleyrand are carried on very actively.

His majesty's first aide-de-camp Junot, who was dispatched to the emperors of Germany and Russia, saw the emperor of Germany at Holitz, who received him very graciously. He was unable to prosecute his mission, on account of the emperor Alexander's having set off post for St. Petersburg, attended by gen. Kutusow.

His majesty received at Brunn M. Haugwitz, and appeared very well satisfied with the communications made by that plenipotentiary, whom he received in the most flattering manner, in consequence of his having been ever opposed to a connexion with England, as well on account of the reputation of his counsels, to which is attributed the present prosperity of Prussia. As much cannot be said of another minister, who born in Hanover, has not been found inaccessible to the influence of gold.—But all these intrigues have and will prove impotent, when opposed to the king of Prussia's superior good sense and discernment. As to the rest, the French nation is dependent on no one, and one hundred and fifty thousand enemies in addition would have but protracted the war a short time longer. France and Prussia, under these circumstances, have reason to be thankful to the duke of Brunswick, the marshals Mollendorff, De Knobolsdorff, Lombard, and above all the king himself. The intrigues of England have often been attended with success, but as in order to form a conclusion it is necessary to take a view of the question in all its bearings, all their intrigues have been baffled by the will of the king. In fact those who conducted them strangely abused his confidence; can Prussia have a more powerful and faithful ally than France.

Russia is the only power in Europe who can engage in war from motives of caprice; after a battle lost or gained, Russia can retire; France, Austria, and Prussia, on the contrary, must deliberate a long time on the consequences of the war, one or two battles are insufficient to exhaust the changes of it.

The Moravian peasantry kill the Russians whenever they meet with them in small parties. They have already destroyed a hundred. The emperor of the French has given orders for the cavalry patroles to ride over the country and prevent this violence.—Since the enemy's army has retired, the Russians left behind it are placed under the protection of their conquerors. It is undeniable that they have committed so many disorders and atrocities, that it is not surprizing that vengeance should be taken of them. They maltreat the poor as well as the rich: 300 lashes seem to them but a moderate chastisement.—There are no outrages which they have not attempted. Pillage, firing of villages, massacres, such was their amusement. They have even murdered priests at the alter! Wretched must be the sovereign who shall bring such a scourge on his country. The battle of Austerlitz has proved an European victory, since it has removed the impsture which attached to the name of these barbarians.

This application however, cannot apply to the court, or the greater number officers, nor to the inhabitants of the cities, who, on the contrary, are civilized even to luxury.

THIRTY-FIFTH BULLETIN OF THE GRAND ARMY.

BRUNN, December 11.

The Russian Army in three columns, began its march the 8th December, on its return to Russia. The first has taken the way of Cracovia and Therespal, the second that of Kaschaw, Lemberg, and Brodi, and the third that of Cizrnau, Watrell and Hussiatin. At the head of the first has departed the emperor of Russia, with his brother the grand duke Constantine.

Besides the artillery used in the battle, an entire park consisting of one hundred pieces of cannon has been taken from the Russians, with all their amunition waggons. The emperor has been to see this park of artillery; he has given orders for its transportation into France.

(Here follow the names of the officers who were distinguished in the battle of the second.)
