The splinters of the mainmast went through the sail and cut the mainsail to pieces. This shock, as may well be imagined, put the vessel in a most perilous situation; and the greatest efforts were necessary to save the vessel from sinking; she making much water, which greatly damaged her cargo and compelled them to put away for Milford, England, where they arrived on the 7th October.

NEW-YORK, March 26.
A letter from Cadiz of the 23d January says, an order has just been received from Madrid, reducing the quarantine of vessels from the northern states of America to fifteen days, and those from the southern states to twenty days.
Capt. Spencer, of ship Grace, arrived here, informs, that orders from England were received at Demerara, prohibiting without reserve, the landing of any goods in American bottoms, excepting Fish, Flour, and Lumber, and also prohibiting absolutely the exportation of sugar and coffee. Repeated remonstrances were made against this order by the planters and merchants, and every effort made to obtain permits to ship sugar and coffee, but refused on the ground that the governor had no right without permission from home. Markets were glutted with American produce.

PHILADELPHIA, March 27.
[Translated for the Philadelphia Gazette.]
ADDRESS
HENRY CHRISTOPHE,
President and Generalissimo of the land and sea forces of the state of Hayti, to the army and people.
Light has just burst out amidst us, and thanks to a beneficent constitution, the plots and conspiracies of which you were going to be the victims, have miscarried. At last a wise collection of laws suitable to our manners, climate, usages, has, if I may be allowed the expression, come out of the chaos, to fix once more the destinies of Hayti.

In vain had my solicitude endeavored for a long time to offer you this precious gift; in vain had I convoked the commons to give you a constitution; my cares, far from being crowned with the wished-for success, had been but an additional food to factions, to try to mislead public opinion, and frame a constitution calculated for their interests and those of their proselytes, at the expense of the liberty of the people, and of sound reason.
All of you have been witnesses, O my countrymen, of the purity of my designs and the sincerity of my intentions; but have not the villains turned to a wicked use this same sincerity, by fomenting rebellion, and kindling a civil war. I was not the one that could be intimidated by their machinations, or misled a single moment on the welfare of our country. I have never ceased day or night to meditate upon the safety of the country. What have I left undone to obtain this end? What have I not done to baffle the secret plots and conspiracies of factions?
I have been always amidst you, and you may certify if ever ambition has influenced my conduct, or sullied my honor. Placed this day by the wishes of my countrymen and brethren of arms on the summit of power, I have yielded to their desires, and accepted of that heavy and honorable burden, because they wished to trust it into my hands, and that I might once more serve our country. Happy will I be, if my efforts be crowned with success, and enable me to secure the happiness of my countrymen!

But to obtain that end, my efforts alone are not sufficient; the observance of the laws and of this constitution is also necessary. Your rights are strictly preserved, and every citizen will find therein securities for his person, property, and that of his family.
The fatal consequences of the wars we have sustained, and still more the bad example of the French, had thrown religion into a forlorn situation; morals were despoiled, and a profligate youth gave way, without remorse, to all the licentiousness of their age; public education was disgraced, and left to mercenary teachers. It has been necessary to restore religion to its dignity, to give support to morals, bring it into repute; inculcate in the minds of young people the sacred principles of good manners and of religion; and convince the people that, without religion and morals, no human society can exist.
Tribunals are also going to insure your interests; equity and justice will hereafter preside over the decisions dictated by its ministers. It is, above all, by probity and uprightness, that it is reserved to the people of Hayti to make themselves be known. Essentially a trading people by their situation and the nature of their commodities, their equity as well as the objects of their commerce must attract to their shores the merchants of all nations of the earth.

As commerce is for us the source of all kinds of riches, it is therefore essential to grant to foreign merchants who come to seek their fortune in our ports, the same protection which is enjoyed by our own countrymen, and offer them that hospitality which those necessary men merit to receive.
To maintain that commerce, and give it a great activity, the perseverance and efforts of agriculture ought to increase. Placed under the finest climate of the earth, profusely favored with the most precious gifts of nature, the cultivators have not to struggle against the severe weather of frozen climates, nor to inure themselves to the rigors and inclemency of seasons. An easy work enriches them, without any privations, puts them upon the level of manufacturing nations. Therefore hasten, industrious cultivators, to fill your stores with all the produce of our fruitful soil; spread out to the eyes of the European merchants, all that can tempt their covetousness, and you will see your commerce flourishing beyond your hopes.
After having given support to religion, refined morals, re-established good manners and encouraged agriculture and commerce, great works will remain yet to be done.— We ought not to neglect the exercise of arms. The enemy watches our motions and observes our steps. The affection of our friends is still without any warranty! Treaties ought to bind the latter, and our armies be ready to fight the former.

Abandoned to ourselves we have in the midst of ourselves our own resources; they are among you, soldiers, who are ready to shed generously your blood, rather than yield to a proud enemy your liberty, the reward of your courage! they are amidst you, inhabitants and industrious cultivators, from whom the state expects its riches. Your union, your submission to laws ought to be the strongest bond of your independence.
The policy of foreign governments has not yet been openly manifested towards us. Whatever it be, without daring them, let us put ourselves in a situation to have nothing to dread from such as would bear us any hostile intention. Let those who will be disposed to keep political relations, or enjoy the advantages of our commerce find an equitable reciprocity. Let us offer to others nothing but death and battles.
While we meditate upon those ideas, let us never forget that arms alone are the warranty of a free people. If culture requires a part of our countrymen, we ought to consider that we are all soldiers, and that warlike nations only have been able to preserve their liberty. Let us call to our remembrance, that a handful of Greeks devoted to their country, confounded the rage of a million of barbarians who came to wretches from their liberty!

Let us swear to imitate their example, to observe and cause our holy constitution to be observed, and to perish rather than to suffer that any violation should be made upon it.
Done at the head quarters Cape-Francois, Feb. 17, 1807, 4th year of the independence.
HENRY CHRISTOPHE,
By the secretary of state,
ROUANEZ, Junior.

FEDERAL GAZETTE.
SATURDAY, MARCH 28.
P. J. Chanquon, late governor of the Island of Curacao, together with his lady and family, and several Dutch officers, were passengers in the ship Abeona, arrived at Charleston, from Kingston, (Jam.)
Extract of a letter from Havana, dated Feb. 25.
"An additional duty has been laid on imports of 1-1-2 per cent. and the same on export, with an augmentation in the valuation on sugars, as some say, of two reals the arroba, and also of two reals addition to the militia duty. It will now stand thus, 34 per cent. on imports, and 10-1-2 per cent. on exports. This arrangement takes effect this day, and on all vessels not entered at the custom house, and those which were not cleared out previous to this morning. The order only arrived from Spain yesterday, but it is dated 2 years ago, and the present copy is the only one that has reached here."

Translated for the Federal Gazette.
PROCLAMATION BY
The Chief of the government of Hayti.
The numerous abuses which have taken place in the different branches of the government, particularly in the custom-house department, have obliged me to take rigorous measures to repress them. The notices which I have given to these hardened and faithless officers, have not brought them to their duty; and my kindness towards foreigners, who came to trade in our ports, has only served as an incentive to their fraud.
It is therefore necessary to adopt severe measures, in order to remedy these abuses, which have deprived government of its resources.
Consequently, to put a stop to such dilapidations, I do order as follows:
1. Every Haytian or foreigner, convicted of having fraudulently endeavored to land or take on board any goods, with a view to avoid a payment of duties, shall be condemned to be hung, and his effects confiscated to the use of the state.
2. Every officer, convicted of having lent a hand to such fraud, shall be condemned to be hung, and his effects confiscated to the use of the government.

3. Every person convicted of having fraudulently embarked or debarked, from one vessel to another, any merchandise, shall also be condemned to be hung, and his effects confiscated.

4. The custom-house officers in particular (and the other officers of the government) are charged with the execution of the present order; and they shall be considered as accomplices in all offences of this nature, of which they shall not inform.
The present proclamation shall be printed, read, and affixed to the doors of the different custom-houses, &c.
Given at the head-quarters, at the Cape, the 30th January, 1807, the fourth year of independence.

The Chief of the Government,
HENRY CHRISTOPHE.
By his Excellency,
The Secretary of the Government,
ROUANEZ, Junior.
