LAW CASE.

An important principle was established by judge Peters, at the last district court, in the case of the mariners who left the ship Woodrop Sims some days after she had been stranded in the bay of Delaware.

A number of them having come up to the city, were apprehended on a charge of desertion, made by the owner (Mr Jos. Sims) and committed to prison under the seventh section of the act of congress, "for the government and regulation of seamen in the merchants' service," which enacts, "that if it shall appear by due proof that the mariner has signed a contract, within the intent and meaning of the act, and that the voyage agreed for is not finished, altered, or the contract otherwise dissolved, and that such seaman has deserted the ship or vessel, or absented himself without leave, it may be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit him to the house of correction or common gaol, there to remain until the ship or vessel shall be ready to proceed on her voyage, or till the master shall require his discharge, and then to be delivered to the said master."

On being brought before the court by Habeas Corpus, it was alledged by some of them that the captain had given his consent to their leaving the vessel—on this point the testimony was defective, but it appeared fully in evidence that the situation of the ship was such, that it was not probable she would ever be got off.

It was contended by Mr. Franklin in behalf of the Mariners, that the voyage was defeated by the disaster which had happened to the vessel, and that, therefore, conformably to every rational construction of the law, the contract between them and the owners was completely at an end; that they were not under any obligation to remain with the vessel, longer than while there was a reasonable prospect of her being able to proceed to sea, and as such prospect had vanished, the owner was not legally justifiable in the course he pursued, and had no right to keep them in confinement and that a different construction of the act would lead to instances of perpetual imprisonment, as the ship might never "be able to proceed on her voyage," and the master might never "require their discharge."

It was urged by Mr. Rawle of counsel for the owner, that the expressions in the law were decisive and could admit of but one construction, "that if the Mariner desert, or absent himself without leave of the master or other commanding officer, he shall be committed until the vessel be ready to proceed to sea, or his discharge be required by the master, that the warrant of the magistrate was in the nature of an execution, conclusive in its effect, and therefore could not be superseded even by *taking bail for the appearance of the party at any specified time; that the commercial interests of the country demanded an enforcement of the power given by the act of congress, as important voyages, might often be defeated by the desertion of the seamen, if the master or owner had no right to confine them, and that in the instance before the court, there was reason to believe that the situation of the vessel had been rendered worse by the absence of the mariners, at a time when their services were most wanted.

The judge decreed, that the conduct of the mariners did not amount to a desertion, within the meaning of the act of congress; that the vessel being stranded put an end to the voyage, and the contract was thereby dissolved; that though it might have been more meritorious in them to have continued their services some time longer, yet if there was a well-founded apprehension of immediate danger to their lives by delaying their departure, they were not under a legal obligation of remaining on board; and that if the situation of the ship were really rendered worse by their absence, it might be made the subject of a civil suit for damages, but afforded no good ground for detaining them in prison. He therefore ordered that they should be discharged.

* This was offered by one of the seamen.

James Mather, sen. esq. is appointed Mayor of the city of New-Orleans—vice J. Watkins, esquire.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Liverpool, to his correspondent in this city, dated February 28, 1807.

"Very little demand has yet been experienced for colonial produce, and the prices therefore remain nominally as last quoted. Considerable supplies of fustic have lately arrived from America, a part of which, of a very good quality, has been sold at 15l. per ton.

"During the greater part of the present month the demand for cotton has been brisk, and large quantities of American have been disposed of. The prices obtained for Upland were 15 1-2d and 17 3-4d, and for a few bags of very fine 18d. New-Orleans 17 1-2d and 19d per lb, and these continue the selling prices. The Uplands now arriving prove very faulty, being discolored and dirty, for the generality of which more than 16 1-2d per lb. cannot be obtained. New-Orleans are very scarce, and it appears probable that very good would bring 20d. per lb. Very few Sea-Islands have yet arrived, and as the demand has improved a little, the stock of old has been in a small degree lessened; prices have improved a little, and fair Charleston brings 2s. 2d. and 2s. 3 1-2d per lb. A few bales of Bourbon have been disposed of at 2s. 4d. per lb. but this description of cotton is still very little inquired for.

"The disposition to speculate in grain still continues. American wheat readily brings 12s. and a parcel of very good has been sold at 12s. 3d. per 70lbs.

Pot ashes are become extremely scarce, and Bostons readily bring 70s. and 71s. per cwt. Pearls are more plentiful, and may be quoted at 68s. and 69s. per cwt.

"Naval stores continue in fair demand, and turpentine brings about 6d per cwt. above our last quotations.

"The good qualities of tobacco are a little more in demand than they were, but prices remain much the same. The ordinary descriptions are nearly unsaleable, in consequence of the continued suspension in the demand for exportation.

"The American ship Bristol Packet, bound from hence to Philadelphia, was captured on the 30th ult. by a Spanish privateer, has since been recaptured by a British cruizer, and is arrived at Falmouth. An American vessel from Falmouth to Leghorn has also been captured by the Spaniards. These circumstances have occasioned a considerable advance in the premiums of insurance, and 8 guineas per cent. was paid in London a few days since on an American vessel from hence to Baltimore. At present, however, insurances from this port to the United States can be effected at four to five, and from thence to this port at three to four guineas per cent. The future rates will be regulated by the future proceedings of the Spaniards and French."

The brig Clarissa, Quandrill, of Philadelphia from Honduras, was wrecked on the Northern Triangles, about the 11th Feb. crew saved—vessel and cargo totally lost.

Captain Smith, from St. Bartholomews, says, that while there, a fire happened in the town of that island which totally destroyed 20 houses.

April 6, lat. 38, 56, was seen the wreck of sloop Fortune, of Gloucester, capt. Bennet, from Oxford, Maryland. Captain and crew, 10 in number, taken off by the Cornplanter, arrived at Philadelphia.

By a gentleman just arrived from N. Orleans, in ship Mermaid, capt. Stacey, we learn that tranquility is restored to that city; the battalion of Volunteers is continued under pay, in the U. S. service.

Arrived, sch'r Susan, Trevett, from Boston. Came into the Capes on Sunday, in company with a brig from Baltimore, bound to St. Bartholomews, returning leaky. A brig having in tow the hull of a large vessel, dismasted, followed them into the Capes; supposed they went up Hampton Roads, being a great distance astern, could make no discovery. Off Patuxent passed the ship Thomas Wilson, from La Guira, bound up.

TO THE PUBLIC.

CONTROVERSIES between individuals are certainly of no importance to the community at large; but it is surely of some consequence to the public that the improper artifices of any man should be exposed. From a consideration of this kind, as well as from motives of personal reputation and individual interest, I feel myself obliged to reply to the scurrilous invective and pompous and pert insolence of Andrew Hanna, the bookseller, which appeared in the "American and Commercial Daily Advertiser" of yesterday.

In the first place, I will introduce the reader to an acquaintance with the facts in the case.

Some months back I undertook to collect, arrange and prepare for press, the names of citizens, streets, &c. for the purpose of publishing a Baltimore Directory, and Warner & Hanna agreed to print it for me. The whole of the responsibility rested on me.

Accordingly I performed with punctuality and as much dispatch as possible the task assigned—the Directory was published—when the said Hanna had the unblushing audacity to tell me, that as soon as he had sold copies sufficient to pay for printing, he would allow me to partake of the profits! It is easy to perceive that I could have procured any other printer in the city to have performed the work for me at a moderate price, without requiring any part of the profits—but this kind-hearted gentleman (who quotes one of lord Kaimes's observations with respect to benefits very learnedly, from a little five-penny book which he keeps for sale) would fain enjoy all the profits to be derived from the sale of the work!

Perceiving his attempt to wrong me, I procured friends, and made him a tender, a legal tender, in specie, of the full amount of the bill for printing—nay, I even offered him fifty dollars over and above what he was entitled to; when, to cap the climax of his penurious baseness, he refused to take the money, or to deliver the books until I should have paid him a book account, which he avers I owe him. This book account, be it understood, originated in this way—I had, in order to oblige said Hanna, and to make something for myself, procured several subscribers to the Life of Bonaparte: this work when published, I delivered to the subscribers, and have paid Hanna more than I have received as yet, on account of them—I owe a balance on these—I have, perhaps, had a little paper and a few quills, from his shop; and, to the immortal honor of said Hanna, and his "benefits," be it known, that once, yes once! he had the noble generosity to lend me one dollar!—I owe the firm, from the above circumstances perhaps about twenty-six dollars, not more.

By delivering me the books he would have enabled me at once to have paid him this trifle:—But no! He thought he could impose on me and compel me to take about 50 dollars for above five months arduous labor. The bill which I offered to pay him is not, in many respects, a just one.—He purchased the paper for 2 dollars 50 cents, and charged me 3 dollars for it—the outside quires which in fairness he ought to have given up to me (as every other printer in the city I believe would) he has not accounted for—and after charging me full price for every thing, he added an item of 50 dollars! And for what? He said for the good will of the work! O, Usury, what names wilt thou not invent to serve thy turn!

The number of copies, for the printing of which I am charged and offered to pay, is 1270. The sheriff's officer when he served the replevin, could only find part—It follows that Hanna must have secreted the remainder, and is now I find offering them for sale. In addition to which he has had the skulking meanness to send (as I am well informed) a boy round to my subscribers with the book, directing him to say that I had sent him. But I feel confident that the citizens of Baltimore will never connive at such dishonorable conduct, and that my subscribers (who shall be waited on in a few days) will never countenace the conduct of Andrew Hanna, to deprive me of the fruits of my labor.

If Hanna treats every body as he treats me, Heaven defend those who may fall in his way with a book to print.

I forbear to retort on him for his scurrrility.—When he came to this city bear and penny-less he found friends to assist his necessities; yet this man, who has risen by the bounty of the community, would gladly tyrannise over one who is honestly endeavoring to make a livelihood.——Surely he deserves to have his image (to use a few words of his own quotation) "engraved in marble," and perched upon the top of the market-house. I have no doubt but the savage would put me "into the hands of Mr. Madeira, goaler," if it were in his power; but I have appealed to the laws of this free country, and he will find that they will protect me against the sinister designs of an impertinent upstart.

I lament that I have been compelled to appeal to the laws. It has not been my wish: I offered to submit our differences to arbitration—to men of his own choice. He refused—and compelled me to resort to the strong arm of justice for redress.

The whole of the facts contained in the foregoing, can be substantiated by respectable testimony.
